Men of spiritual vision are not visionary men. Spirituality is practicality.—Rev. Dr. W. W. Landrum, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Advance of Christianity.

The cause of Christianity is going on from conquering to conquer. God lives and men believe it and love him.—Rev. C. J. Hall, Denver.

Make Him Better Known.

If we would know Christ better, we must make him better known to the world without.—Rev. Dr. Shaw, Presbyterian, New York.

Personal Influence Requisite.

Despite the talk of money and methods, there is really but one way of propagating the gospel, and that is by the personal influence of souls saved.—Rev. E. C. Moore, Congregationalist, Providence, R. I.

Practicability of Religion.

For all the vocations today in our industrial world religion is practicable and the Lord Jesus Christ can be served acceptably by all the people all the week and at all times.—Rev. W. C. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati.

The Stream of Progress.

It is useless to force mediæval ideas on a world that is reaping the benefits of modern thought. The stream of progress will not flow backward to accommodate impractical idealists.—Rev. Dr. Roseman, Hebrew, Baltimore.

The Nursery of the Soul.

Some people think only of the immortality beyond the grave, forgetting the life here and the fact that it will live forever in some one's memory. This is but a nursery, where the human soul begins.—Rev. Dr. Edward Blake, Methodist, Pittsburg.

Violation of Sabbath Law.

The man who violates the Sabbath law robs his nerves and muscles and brain, cheats himself and gives to disease a mortgage on his entire physical state. The nation which has no Sabbath is sure to go to pieces.—Rev. W. A. Hunter, Presbyterian, Denver.

Duty Toward Children.

God intends two things for children.

that they shall take this truth with the favorable introduction of parental commendation and elucidation, and, further, they shall have fullness of consideration and opportunity.—Rev. M. T. Haw, Methodist, St. Louis.

Sacred Dignity of Marriage.

No teaching in our day and place is more needed than that which recalls and emphasizes the sacred dignity of the marriage state and the weighty responsibilities and tender, yet holy, duties and rewards it involves.—Rev. M. P. Smith, Catholic, San Francisco.

A World of Your Own.

Once feel God's hand on your shoulder and you will forget the world and make a world of your own. What others enjoy will be nothing to you, and what you will find in your own pathway when you are in the right relation to him is sufficient for you.—George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Sacredness of All Callings.

The man who sees clearly that he was born for a commercial life and devotes himself to business, the man who makes the law his life work or medicine or teaching or agriculture or carpentering, is under as holy an obligation as I am to make his calling a ministry of sacrifice and service.—Rev. Dr. Frank H. Rowley, Baptist, Boston.

Do the Best You Can.

It is only drudgery that makes lazy men, while congenial work makes industrious men. In the old times it used to be said that we must do certain things or take the consequences. What I would have you do now is just this: Go on faithfully doing the best you can and don't be unhappy because you cannot do more.—Rev. F. A. Hinckley, Unitarian, Philadelphia.

The Purchase of Nobility.

It has been proved by 6,000 years of history that the only way to develop men, to quicken the greatness in them, to enlarge their minds and release the pentup perfumes of loveliness, is to expose them to conflict, to trials, disappointments and anguish. These are the prices paid for nobility. No man inherits nobility; he purchases it with tears and anguish.—Rev. Dr. George C. Lorimer, Baptist, New York.

The Divine Light.

If there were men who had never been awake during the day and had never once seen the sun or felt its warmth and if these men had come to doubt even the existence of the sun, their doubt and every trace of their agnosticism would be instantly removed were they to come out but once under the sky in which the sun was shining. In like manner all doubt and agnosticism with reference to God are instantly removed by coming into God's light.—Rev. W. S. Fulton, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

The New Testament Miracles.

Regarded as symbols of Jesus' love and sympathy, the New Testament miracles have a unique value, but the moment they are put forward as proofs of his nature or work the question of evidence and testimony arises, and we are diverted from the spiritual experiences of the soul to the problems of science, philosophy and criticism. It is also well to remember that Jesus left no account of himself, his work or his claims and that what we have in the New Testament is the reports of those who did not always understand him.—Rev. F. L. Phalen, Unitarian, Worcester, Mass.

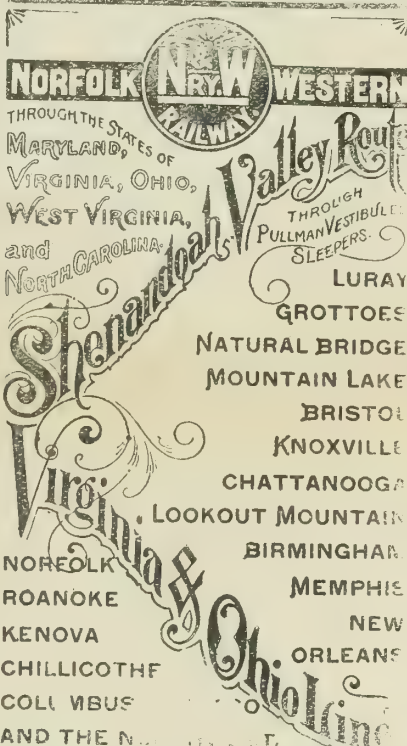

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention will be held at Portland, Me., October 17th to the 22d.

Rev. Samuel F. Pearson, recently best known as Sheriff Pearson, of Portland, Me., died August 8th. He devoted his life to temperance work, and during these recent years has thoroughly demonstrated that prohibitory laws can be enforced.

The Union Central

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

IS DR. JACKSON A HERETIC?

Standards. These almost invariably speak of future punishment in Scripture language. They do not create the doctrine; they only quote it. If they alter the doctrine as taught in the Scriptures, they are heretics and are of no authority; if they do not alter the doctrine as taught in the Bible, then they receive and teach it as they find it in that sacred book. If they do, they use the terms eternal and everlasting as applicable to the punishment of the wicked in the same sense in which the Holy Ghost uses them in the inspired writings.

Jackson, if tried at all, should be tried by the Scriptures, and not by the saysoes of fallible men. Now, if he is tried by the Scriptures, then it is incumbent upon his prosecutors to show that the Scriptures teach the doctrine of endless punishment—and therefore do not support the theory of eternal probation. If they can do this, they will prove that Jackson is, in some sense, a heretic, and that he should,
after the first and second admonition be rejected. He cannot Scripturally be rejected without the second admo-nition; and even then he cannot be rejected if this admonition reforms him.

Now, I wish to be distinctly understood as not advancing any opinion of my own on the doctrine of eternal probation. But I am free to say that Jackson's prosecutors will find the task of showing that the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the final and irrevocable damnation of the wicked a more difficult task than they suppose. It will not be sufficient for them to quote the words of Jesus, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal," for it is probable that Jackson will deny that the terms everlasting and eternal mean endless. At least, he can do this.

From what I see in your paper, I suspect he has failed to avail himself of this vantage ground. He can, however, say that everlasting and eternal are a translation of the same Greek word aionios, which is an adjective, founded on the noun aion; that, according to Liddell and Scott, aion means a space or period of time, a lifetime, life, one's time of life, age, the age of man, an age, generation, a long space of time, eternity, an era, age, period of dispensation, the world.

He can go to the etymology of the English words everlasting and eternal;
he can tell his prosecutors that everlasting comes from the Latin ævum, age and lasting; and that eternal comes from the Latin æternus, which is derived from ætas, age. He may tell you that ever in English is only ævum (age) in Latin; forever does not mean endless. He may also say that the term punishment is a translation of the Greek kolasin, which primarily means pruning; that you prune a vine, not to kill it, but to make it fruitful.

So that it is doubtful whether Dr.
Jackson can be convicted of heresy by the Scriptures, if he is tried by an impartial jury. Hence, if I dare to advise, I would say let him alone.

But if Dr. Jackson is to be tried and rejected, what are you to do with the book agents who print and sell the book? It is not the writing that is to do the mischief; it is the circulation of the book. In circulating the book are not the agents as guilty as Dr.

Jackson? Can you punish the one and not the other? But I would advise (if I dare advise) not to bother either the agents or the author.

The recent growth of the sentiment against the endless punishment of the sinner is phenomenal. This growth is real cause of alarm, if the sentiment is false. If it is true, let it grow.

I believe in æonian punishment in the same sense in which it is taught by the Holy Spirit. I believe in eternal everlasting punishment in the same sense in which these adjectives were used by the infallible Lord Jesus.

The word damnation comes from the Latin word damnum, loss. I believe in eternal damnation as follows:

Every man, whether final sinner or final saint, suffers a loss when he sins, and that loss will be endless. It will never be repaired. This loss will be suffered by even saints in heaven.

As long as there is sin in the universe there will be punishment—"the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

A sinner is a wretch; an eternal sinner is an eternal wretch; and if a sinner is an endless sinner he will be an endless wretch.

A man is a fool who lives in sin and builds on the hope of a future probation. He is a fool who would be willing to endure a thousand years of he-l for the pleasures of sin in this time, when the saint here is a thousand times happier than the sinner here.

But if Jackson is tried, I presume he will be tried by the Standards—so called. And the Standards will be made to say once in hell always in he-l—final perseverance. But it would be wrong to put Jackson out of the Church by the Standards, when the Church has practically repudiated the Standards. These teach the doctrine of sanctification as a second, separate and distinct blessing—distinct from regeneration. That doctrine has been practically repudiated by the Methodist ministry and laity. It is one of the fundamental doctrines of Methodism as taught by the Standards; and yet nearly costs a Methodist preacher his ecclesiastical life to preach this doctrine. To repudiate this doctrine is to repudiate the Standards; and we ought not to repudiate the Standards, and yet try an accused man by them. If the Standards are the law, three-fourths of the Methodist ministry of the day ought to be expelled from the ministry
—I among the rest. It is not right to make fish of one and fowl of another.

We should not use the Standards to punish the man (in the joke) used his gun shoot at the animal so as to hit it if was a deer and to miss it if it was calf. If the rascals are to be turnout, let us turn them all out. Let us mass the restorationists and the an-second blessing people and send the all to hell together!

"When the saloon dies, the devil put on deep mourning."

Religious News.

Rev. L. W. Guyer is at Waverly this week assisting the Rev. C. H. Green in a series of meetings.—Botetourt Progress.

Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather an exceedingly large congregation heard Rev. Geo. E. Booker last night at High Street church on "A Woman's Love," the first of a series of sermons to young ladies. On next Sunday night Mr. Booker will discuss the subject of "A Woman's Happiness."—Petersburg Progress.

In a strong sermon preached to a large congregation Sunday morning, Dr. W. E. Evans, rector of Monumental Episcopal church, scored certain preachers for their habit of going after sinners with blood in their eye. No names were called, but there was obvious reference to certain local happenings of recent date.

Among other things Dr. Evans declared it to be a strange way to try to save sinners by going after them with stick and calling them ugly names. "I had," he said, the opposite from the effect desired.—Leader.

Rev. George H. McFaden, the genial pastor of Wright Memorial church, the end of whose term at this church is just approaching, has accomplished a great work among his people in the rebuilding of the church during his brief stay, and by his unceasing labors and kindly admonition among the young men in the community has endeared himself to a host of that class who are to be the future bone and marrow of the church. The Young Men's League of Wright Memorial church have made a special request to the Fourth Quarterly Conference for Mr. McFaden's return as their pastor next year, and it is more than probable that their wishes will receive the attention at the hands of the Bishop which they justly merit. The Fourth Quarterly Conference, it is understood, has requested the presiding elder of the Portsmouth district, Rev. W. C. Vaden, to use every means at his command for the return of Mr. McFaden to his present charge next year.—Portsmouth Star.

Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith, Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, preached for his old congregation at Epworth Methodist church Sunday morning, and was greeted by a very large congregation, despite the very inclement weather. The Bishop selected as his text the Apostle Paul's exclamation: "I bow mine knees unto God the Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the whole family in heaven and earth are named." Dr. Smith gave special emphasis to the latter part of his text, making his theme. "The Church Universal, God the Father, and the visible Church on earth the mother." The Bishop dwelt at length on the Church as a great body, defining its mission in the world to bring men to the saving knowledge of Christ, and to make them subjects of His kingdom of grace and heirs of the kingdom of glory everlasting.

The eloquent speaker forcibly applied his discourse to the individual Christian, and pointed out in unmistakable terms what it was to be an heir of heaven. The speaker grew very pathetic at times, greatly affecting his hearers, many in the congregation weeping under the powerful presentation of the truth. At the close of the service many went forward and bade the Bishop an affectionate good-bye. The scene was a most touching one.

Bishop Smith will leave Thursday with his family for his new home in Charlotte, N. C.—Virginian-Pilot.

For some weeks rumors have been circulated in this city to the effect that the Rev. Dr. R. D. Smart, of the St. Louis Conference, would be transferred to the Virginia Conference M. E. Church, South, with the view of being appointed successor of Rev. R. H. Bennett, who is now the pastor of Epworth church, this city.

The Virginian-Pilot was wired by the St. Louis Republic several weeks ago to know if the leading Methodist church of Norfolk had asked for Dr. Smart's transfer to the Virginia Conference, and for his appointment by Bishop Duncan to the pastorate of Epworth church.

The Virginian-Pilot representative made diligent inquiry of the officials of Epworth church to know if there was any truth in the rumor, but could get no information from them on the subject.

The following clipping from the St. Louis, Mo., Christian Advocate, the leading organ of the Methodist Church in Missouri, announces the fact of Dr. Smart's transfer in the following language:

"Dr. R. D. Smart has been transferred to Virginia, and will possibly be the pastor of our great Epworth church, of Norfolk, the pulpit from which the eloquent Dr. A. Coke Smith was elected to the episcopacy. We congratulate our friends of the Old Dominion. We doubt whether there is a man in all our Methodism who has less to do with engineering his appointments than Dr. Smart, or gives more general satisfaction in his work."

Rev. Dr. Smart is a native of South Carolina, a man of prepossessing appearance and has the reputation of being an eloquent pulpit orator. He is now closing his fourth year as pastor of the leading M. E. church, South, in St. Louis.

The transfer of a preacher from one Conference to another is made by an agreement on the part of the Bishop who presides over the St. Louis Conference and the Bishop in charge of the Virginia Conference, who is Bishop W. W. Duncan, D. D., of Spartansburg, S. C., with the consent of the preacher who is to be transferred.

The power of appointing a minister to any church is in the hands of the Presiding Bishop and his council, which consists of ten presiding elders, and he can assign him to any church he sees fit within the bounds of the Conference.—Virginian-Pilot.

The Methodist preachers of the city in their weekly meeting this morning had a full attendance and a most pleasant and profitable time. The chairman, Rev. L. W. Guyer, presided, and Rev. S. C. Hatcher led the devotions. We had with us our beloved presiding elder, Rev. R. T. Wilson, and Rev. J. O. Moss, pastor Dinwiddie circuit. The reports of their labors submitted by the pastors in the main were as usual encouraging. Near the close of our ecclesiastical year and on the eve of the Conference, which meets in Richmond the middle of November, the talks of the brethren naturally drifted towards appointments, etc., for the next year. Very few changes will be made in the pastorate here; our pastors here know they have struck a good thing in their pastorates in Petersburg. The unfavorable weather of yesterday made against church services in the number of persons attending, but under the circumstances the congregations were encouragingly large. That earnest worker, Rev. J. A. Thomas, pastor of Wesley church, is pushing the rebuilding of his church now in progress. Next Friday night, Rev. Geo. H. McFaden, of Portsmouth, will lecture in the city in the interest of the enterprise. Bro. S. C. Hatcher, the genial wide-awake Market Street pastor, reported an interesting service on yesterday morning for the benefit of rally day. Had the day been favorable no doubt a large congregation would have been present. Rev. Geo. E. Booker, of High Street church, gave to the preachers a copy of his "order of service" for last night, which contained the hymns used, the subject of the sermon, the place in the Bible where the scripture lesson is found, the order of service for this week, etc. This growing church and the popular pastor are wide awake to facilitate in every way the Lord's work. A delightful meeting our gathering this morning proved to be; good humor was dominant, and everything passed off pleasantly.—Petersburg Progress.

The president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, was present at the Methodist preachers' meeting yesterday morning, but at his request Rev. R. H. Bennett presided at the opening, but afterwards called Rev. Graham H. Lambeth to the chair.

The opening prayer was offered by Rev. George Wesley Jones, pastor of Trinity church.

Rev. R. H. Bennett stated that the Rev. George R. Stuart, who had just closed a great meeting in Richmond, would begin a meeting with him at Epworth Methodist church, this city, Sunday, October 19th, to continue two weeks. He also stated that services preparatory to Mr. Stuart's meetings would be held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday night of next week. Rev. J. K. Joliff will preach Wednesday night, Rev. C. L. Bane Thursday night, and Rev. E. T. Dadmun Friday night. He requested all the preachers present to attend Mr. Stuart's meetings and aid in making them the means of bringing about a great religious revolution in Norfolk.

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

Rev. W. P. Jordan stated that he had a varied experience Sunday. He attended the Methodist Sunday school at Park Place Sunday morning and worshipped at the Presbyterian church at 11 A. M., heard Rev. Dr. C. B. Bishop preach a fine sermon on "Consecration," and witnessed the installation of Rev. Arnold Hall, pastor of the Park Place Presbyterian church, and heard Dr. Bishop preach again in the afternoon.

Rev. C. H. McGhee attended Sunday school at the Lambert's Point church Sunday morning, preached and administered the Holy Communion at 11 o'clock. Held services at night.

Rev. Ernest Stevens held his usual services at Owen's Memorial Sunday and attended a funeral in the afternoon.

Rev. R. H. Bennett reported an excellent Sunday school at McKendree church, preached at 11 A. M. Sunday, which was followed by a most pleasant communion service. At night he preached to a fair congregation.

Rev. J. N. Latham had a most excellent day at Park View. There was a large Sunday school and two fine congregations to hear him at the regular preaching services.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun preached to the usual congregations at Centenary. His morning sermon was followed by a most delightful communion service.

Rev. J. B. Merritt preached and conducted the communion service at Port Norfolk Sunday morning and conducted his usual services Sunday afternoon and night at the Seamen's Bethel.

Rev. E. K. Odell had fair congregations at Huntersville church and a most excellent Epworth League meeting in the afternoon.

Rev. George Wesley Jones reported stirring services at Trinity church. He had one conversion at the morning service, and received two into the church on profession of faith and one by certificate.

Rev. C. W. Cain worshipped at Monumental Sunday morning and at Central at night.

Rev. R. N. Smith preached at Oaklette Sunday morning. On account of the rain he held no service at Bethel church in the afternoon.

Rev. C. L. Bane attended the Sunday school at Cumberland Street church Sunday, preached to large congregations at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. At the close of a very large communion at the morning service two young men came forward to the altar and consecrated their lives to Christ. He received two members into the church.

Rev. George H. McFaden had a good Sunday school and good congregations to hear him at Wright Memorial Sunday. He had a delightful communion service after the morning sermon. He attended a funeral in the afternoon. At the evening service a man who had been a hard drinker and a gambler for years went to the altar and bowed as a penitent. Mr. McFaden baptized a candidate at Ocean View Saturday.

Bishop A. Coke Smith preached a sermon of great pathos and power at Epworth church Sunday morning on "The Church of God Being One Family on Earth and Heaven" to a large congregation. At night the pastor, Rev. R. H. Bennett, preached the fifth of his series of sermons on "Marriage and the Home" to a good congregation, notwithstanding the inclement weather.

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presby-
terian Church, Chicago

Chicago. Sound advice in view of the uncertainty of life is given in this sermon by Rev. F. De Witt Talmage on the text Isaiah xxxviii, 1, "Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die."

I am going to stay aboard this planet as long as I can. When the time comes for me to die, I believe sufficient grace will be given to me with which to die. But I have never felt less like dying than at the present time. My home was never so happy, my friends never more kind, my work never more absorbing. Present earthly life is inexpressibly sweet to me. I feel in reference to it a great deal as did Christopher North, the physical and literary athlete, who, with his friends and children, used to race over the heather of old Scotland, his yellow curls a-flying in the winds, singing and shouting as he ran, because he was bubbling over with joy and animal spirits. I am in love with the world because I like the people who are in it.

But, though earthly life may be a priceless boon to some people as well as to myself, yet there must come to all a time when we shall have to die. Perhaps, like Hezekiah of my text, who besought God by prayer to increase his earthly day, we may be able to prolong our existence ten, fifteen or even twenty years by rigidly obeying the well tested physical laws of health. Dio Lewis, the great lecturer upon hygiene, once declared that every normal healthy child born into the world ought to live to be at least 100 years old. He asserted that nearly all the members of the human race do not live out half their earthly life because they do not eat the right kind of food, wear the proper clothing and take the proper amount of exercise.

But though the longevity of the human race might be increased to 100 or even 200 years, though the present generation might be able to reach the two hundredth and fiftieth milestone which marks the highway of life's journey instead of only the twentieth or fiftieth or seventieth milestone, yet for every man and woman there must come at last an end to earthly existence. The Bible distinctly and emphatically states it. All history proves it. Though Dio Lewis himself rigidly practiced the laws of health which his keen and far reaching intellect framed; though he only ate just enough food to replenish the amount of waste tissue; though he wore the proper clothing and daily took the proper amount of physical exercise, yet Dio Lewis himself had to die. So the same words of warning which the prophet Isaiah brought to the sick ruler in the ancient Jerusalem palace I bring to you. They are just as pertinent for the present generation as they were to the Hebrew king who lived nearly 3,000 years ago.

The First Steps Necessary.

In anticipating his earthly demise a common sense man should in the first place set his temporal house in order. That means he should, if necessary, get his life insured. He should make out his last will and testament. He should appoint the executors of his estate, and the future guardian of his children. He should explain the details of his business and invest his moneys in such a manner as that his executors can easily carry out his plans. He should train up his children or his lieutenants so that they may carry on his work after he is dead. He should, if desirable, buy his family plot and make all arrangements for the last resting place of himself and his loved ones. We have contempt for the man who has so little interest in the temporal welfare of his wife and children that he will not make a last will and testament.

"But, Mr. Talmage," answers some one, "I would do as you say, but I am very superstitious about this matter of making a will. I intend to make a will and fix up my temporal affairs when I feel that my life is drawing to an earthly close, but not now. I have always superstitiously felt that when a man makes his last will and testament he will certainly die before the year is out. Therefore I want to postpone making my will as long as possible."

Although I am, comparatively speaking, a young man, yet I have had a great deal of experience in sickrooms and by deathbeds, and, my brother, I want to warn you as a friend that in all probability when you come to die you will not have any time to fix up your estate and make an intelligent will and last testament. In all probability you will be in such physical and mental weakness that you will not have enough strength to do anything else but lie in your bed and murmur a few words of farewell until you are gone. Therefore, my brother, what you want to do in reference to setting your temporal house in order through the influence of your last will and testament you had better do right away. When death comes, your brain may be too feeble to plan and your fingers too trembling to hold a pen.

Furthermore, my friend, that statement of yours about being superstitious in reference to making a will is very foolish. It is as foolish as the superstition some people have about sitting one of thirteen at a table or looking at the new moon over the wrong shoulder or carrying a newborn babe downstairs before he is carried upstairs. It is so foolish that I am surprised it should be anywhere entertained among intelligent people. You will not die because you make your last will and testament, but you ought to make your last will and testament in reference to your temporal affairs because your death is inevitable. "Set thine house in order."

A Question Answered.

"But, Mr. Talmage," says some other, "what is the good of making a last will and testament? I have nothing to leave except the few clothes in my wardrobe, and there are not many of them. I am a clerk on a comparatively small salary. I live up to the last cent of my income, and I cannot afford to insure my life for the benefit of my children."

My brother, that is a very brave and frank statement to make. You say it is useless for you to make a last will and testament because you have nothing to leave and you cannot afford to even get your life insured. If you, a great, big, strong man, are having such a hard time to make a living, what will your physically weak wife do with a big brood of little ones strapped upon her back when you are dead? If it is so hard for you to swim in the current of life and keep your head above the waters, how will she, a poor widow, be able to do it when your strong arm is gone? Will the world be kinder to her than it is to you? Has the cruel world ever been any gentler or extended a more helpful hand to a wife and mother who is left a poverty stricken widow than it has for you?

Mark you, for what most men foolishly squander every year, for the money they spend for cigars and luxuries, for theater tickets, fishing excursions and baseball games, clubs and parties, they could get their lives insured for enough, and more than enough, to support and educate their children long after they are dead. Furthermore, my brother, if you are not willing to economize in your selfish indulgence for the physical maintenance and mental development of your children by insuring your life, then your professed love for your wife and children is a mere insincere profession of the lips and not of the heart. "Set thine house in order."

"But," I hear some one saying, "the temporal aspects of this text do not affect me at all. I do not have to get my life insured. I am not poor. I am one of the wealthiest merchants of this city. I am building up a fortune, which is growing larger every day. If my wife or children wish to buy anything, all that they have to do is to go down to the city stores and charge the same to me. I pay for all their luxuries without a murmur. Besides that, I have made a last will and testament and left them everything."

Yes; your statement may be all true. But, my successful merchant friend, have you literally set your temporal house in order? Have you taken your wife into your business confidence so that she knows your plans and ideas? Have you ever made her your business confidant so that she would be able to take care of the money and the business after you are dead? Have you taught her the difference between the stability of a government bond and a Wall street speculation in stocks? Have you ever taught her the necessity of taking a receipt? Why, the wife and the mother of your children may be as helpless as a little child in reference to business matters after you are dead. She might be so helpless that the executors could swindle her out of her money as easily as you could cheat in business a five-year-old lad. Leave your wife sense as well as cents; leave her brains as well as bonds. "Set thine house in order."

Make Wise Provisions.

One of the dearest friends of our family some years ago was left a widow with $300,000. Her executor persuaded her to invest the same in railroad stocks so that she might have a million dollars. She went into Wall street and speculated. Today she is absolutely penniless. Make no such mistake in reference to your wife as that husband made in reference to his wife, who was our family friend. The old proverb trenchantly teaches that "any fool can make money, but it takes a very wise man to keep it." When you set your temporal house in order, see that your loved ones will be able to care for the money which you will bequeath them. See that the money which you will leave will not be able to slip through their fingers as water can run through a sieve.

But my text has a wider scope than the mere fixing up of the temporal house. In anticipating his earthly demise a common sense man should set his spiritual as well as his temporal house in order. He should prepare for his own eternal journey over the river of death, besides looking after the temporal interests of the members of the household he is going to leave behind. Unless a man has taken a long journey away from home, a journey which runs up into the months and perhaps into the years, he can have no conception of the immense amount of preparation necessary. In the first place, he must get his letter of credit drawn up and signed. It would be practically impossible to start on a journey around the world, as I did some years ago, carry enough gold and silver with you to pay all your necessary expenses. Why, the gold and silver would be heavy as a satchelful of lead. Best the gold and silver that are stamped the American mint would not be acceptable in foreign lands. Every country has its own system of national currency. Further, if a traveler should weighed down with a satchelful coin he would in all probability be waylaid by some thief and murdered and slain for his gold. So it is the custom of the traveler about to start a long journey to buy a letter of credit. He pays to the cashier of any one of our great American banking houses like Brown Bros. or J. P. Morgan & Co., a certain amount of money. The bank gives him a letter of credit, and he can get the money noted in the letter of credit cashed by the agent that bank in almost every city of the world. If you are going into any dangerous region it is also very important for you to have a passport. This passport, signed by the secretary of state at Washington, is a notification that you are an American citizen. If a foreign nation insults or maltreats that nation will have to answer for insult to the United States government.

Getting an Eternal Passport.

Now, my friend, as you have to take an eternal journey, as perhaps in a very near future you will have to leave this old planet and go into endless life beyond, what spiritual preparation have you made for this momentous embarkation? Have you made the proper spiritual preparation for the journey which shall take you into a country where you would like to live through endless eternity, where you would like to live until time itself shall be no longer? Have you in reference to this eternal journey a letter of credit made out at the Bank of Divine Grace? Have you an eternal passport written in red ink—written in blood which flowed out of the wound side of a dying and an atoning Christ? If you have not such a letter of credit, you are ill prepared, you are lost indeed, even though in this world you had all the wealth of a Rothschild, a Vanderbilt, a Rockefeller or an Astor, even though you once on earth lived in as magnificent a mansion as the Dives of old, at whose gate the devils were licking the sores of a dying beggar. Shrouds have no pockets, and skeletons bony fingers can hold no gold, and all your worldly riches will then be but dross, which you cannot carry with you on that last journey. But, if you have the letter of credit, divine grace and the passport stamped with the crimson seal of Calvary, then the long journey will be accomplished safely, and the gates of the New Jerusalem will be opened unto you, no matter how financially poor you may have been on earth, because you are pleading there for admittance in Christ's name.

Henry Clews tells us that when Cornelius Vanderbilt, the richest man of his day, lay dying, turning his back upon his $90,000,000 as though he had been the poorest outcast in the street, he had to ask his Christian wife to pray for him and sing one of the Christian hymns which she had learned in her father's house. May we, and all, never make the mistake of a tagged millionaire made in trying to buy our divine passport at the last moment. May we, long before our earthly demise, apply at the Bank of Grace for a letter of credit which will successfully carry us through the da-

NO "CANADIAN" NOR "AMERICAN" CHURCH.

The Church of England in Canada speaks of itself as the Canadian Church, and an organization has just been formed to make "a united and well-ordered effort to provide this new country (that is, the rapidly growing western provinces of Canada) with the ministrations of the Church." "The Sun," of this city, shows that there is no Canadian Church. There is no State Church in Canada, and the Anglican adherents comprise only a minority of religious believers. To prove its proposition, "The Sun" gives the following Canadian statistics:

Roman Catholics .....	1,992,017
Methodists .....	847,765
Presbyterians .....	755,326
Anglicans .....	646,059
Baptists .....	303,839
Lutherans .....	63,982
Miscellaneous creeds .....	28,157
No creed stated .....	106,739
Total .....	4,833,239

These prove that the "Anglican membership ranks fourth and is less than one-seventh of the whole body of religious membership in the dominion."

The light and easy way in which the Anglican Church in Canada speaks of itself as the Canadian Church is fully paralleled by the presumption of those members, preachers, and papers of the Protestant Episcopal Church who speak of that body as the American Church. The latest statistics of the religious denominations in this country are:

Roman Catholic .....	9,239,166
Methodist .....	5,966,500
Baptist .....	4,581,558
Lutheran .....	1,696,238
Presbyterian .....	1,605,015
Protestant Episcopal .....	741,697

There are more than 6 Baptists, 8 Methodists, 2 Lutherans, 2 Presbyterians, and 12 Catholics to each Protestant Episcopalian. Of all the Christian communicants in the United States the Protestant Episcopal Church has but 1 in 35.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

In the October McClure's, Miss Stone concludes the account of her "Six Months Among Brigands," and makes such a strong finish that one is half inclined to wish the brigands had not let her go so soon. As it was, however, the release was sensational enough, for the brigands were at that time so hotly pursued by the Turkish soldiery that to venture near enough to a village to free their captives was to risk the death of all. At length, when they had almost given up hope, they were freed—in the dead of night, at the bottom of a desolate valley—and the next morning with difficulty they made their way to a town and announced themselves; whereupon it seemed as if half the population of Macedonia turned out to greet them. In addition to Miss Stone's paper, Mr. S. S. McClure contributes a brief sketch of A. A. Gargiulo, the first dragoman of the American Legation at Constantinople, to whom, more than to anybody else, is due the credit of Miss Stone's release.

THE UNSPEAKABLE TURK.

Mr. Ray Stannard Baker, the well known magazinist, has lately contributed to The Outlook two articles on conditions in Turkey as seen by a trained observer. The following is his description of the state of affairs in the Turkish post-office, and of Turkish backwardness generally:

The Turk suspects everybody and everything, and no private act, no seclusion, is safe from his intrusion. Every telegram sent from the public offices is at once reported to the authorities. No one can safely send a letter by the Turkish post unless he is willing to have it opened and read, and take the chances of having it confiscated if the censor finds anything that can be twisted into an insult to Mohammedanism. As a result of this condition and the inability of foreigners residing in Turkey to communicate with any certainty with their friends, some of the great European nations have established post-offices of their own in Turkish cities, in which they employ only Europeans, use their own stamps, and watch their mail bags until they pass beyond the prying eyes of the Turks. In Salonica there are no fewer than five post-offices—British, Austrian, French, Servian and Turkish; in Constantinople, six. If one wishes to be sure of his mail, he must inquire at four of them at least; and if he really wants to have his letters reach their destination, he must send them through some post-office other than Turkish. For the reason that the authorities cannot be sure of a complete knowledge of all the conversation that might pass, the telephone has been excluded from the empire; and no Turkish city is electrically lighted because, it is said, the officials discovered the word dynamo in the applications for the necessary contracts, and dynamo suggested dynamite. The official Turk was paralyzed with fear! So all Turkey is still candle-lighted, or at best lamp-lighted. Whatever is Turkish in Turkey is sure to be out of order, disorganized, dirty; whatever is foreign is, by contrast, well kept.

WHY YOUNG PEOPLE HESITATE TO MARRY.

The standards of social decency and respectability are constantly rising; the amount of money supposed to be necessary to begin the married life increases decade by decade. Young men say that they will not marry until they are able to support a wife in good style, and, as the wealth of the land increases and their neighbors live more and more luxuriously, the phrase "in good style" is constantly undergoing changes of meaning. Young women become accustomed in their parental homes to a certain amount of comfort and of leisure, and they do not relish the thought of beginning to live more plainly and more laboriously in homes of their own. Thus an increasing number of young men and women decline or postpone marriage.

It is true that the family life does require of both men and women the relinquishment of a certain amount of liberty, the assumption of new burdens, the incurring of pain and privation and sacrifice. The unwillingness to meet these demands is the prime cause of the diminution in the number of marriages which the census reports to us. And one of the inevitable consequences is the increase of social immorality.

Many parents discourage the marriage of their sons and daughters under conditions which would be far more favorable than those under which they themselves set out in life bravely and happily. They are unwilling that their children should meet the responsibilities which they met and bear the burdens which they bore, and in meeting and bearing which they won their own manhood and womanhood. Many a father refuses his daughter to a young man whose circumstances and prosperity are far more favorable than were his when he was married; many a mother warns her son against alliance with a girl whose heart is as true and brave as hers was when she set up her own home.

The father and mother, in their prosperity, have lost their sense of the value of character; they have come to put far too much emphasis on the mere accidents of life. For it is true not only of a man's life, but of the life of a man and woman together, that "it consisteth not in the abundance of the things that" they possess. They can be happy and true and brave with but few things. To begin together as their parents began, to live simply and frugally, to face the problems of life without flinching, to exercise their wits together over a limited menage, what is this but the discipline in which all best qualities of life are won?—Dr. Washington Gladden, in Social Salvation.

STORY OF THE STRINGTOWN SCHOOL TEACHER.

(From Warwick of the Knobs. Published by permission of Dodd, Mead & Co.)

"A penny for your thoughts, professor," said a bystander.

"I am thinking of a child. Who leads my mind from these scenes and your trivial stories to him? They have nothing in common. I am thinking of a dirty face, a dirty face," he repeated, and lapsed into silence.

"Tell us about the dirty face."

"You are acquainted with the little house, just above the mouth of the Mt. Carmel Pike, the house in which old black Ephraim lived, and which, since his disappearance, has been deserted; windowless it has stood the many days."

Professor Drake rested his voice a second and then continued, "It is empty again. Following this sentence came another interlude, when, as though by an effort, he added, 'Very dirty face.'"

What could be troubling our village teacher? Never before had we heard him speak in so desultory a manner. Then he proceeded:

"Shortly after the beginning of the last school session a gentle tap came on the school-room door. I opened and ushered in a boy about ten years of age, leading a younger boy by the hand. They stopped and looked about in a frightened manner and seemed inclined to retreat, when I said in a pleasant tone 'Don't be afraid, children. Do you wish to attend school?'"

"We do, do we, Jim and me," spoke the older one in a drawling monotone. He held out his hand, and in its palm rested a bright silver quarter.

"Mam sed fer us ter come ter schu 'til the wuth ov this war taken out larmin'."

"Dirty and ragged were these boys, dirtier and more ragged than ever children before were seen in the Stringtown school. I returned the money and seated them on the end of a bench away from the other children, with whom it was questionable whether they should come into personal contact. That night they were detained after school and I got their history. They came from Grassy Creek, and with the lot of a father (as I learned afterward) and a mother little, if any, better than he, lived now in the house deserted by old black Ephraim.

"Be sure and wash your faces before coming to school to-morrow morning," I said as they were dismissed. Next morning they came with clean faces, but in a few days were as dirty as before. This time I spoke more positively.

"You must wash your hands and faces before starting to school." Again the faces were clean, but within a week they were as dirty as when first I saw them. Gentlemen, I pleaded with, scolded, threatened those children. I exhausted every power of persuasion and vainly exerted every possible influence. Had they seemed at all provoked, or had they resented my attempts to reform their slovenly habits, I should have been delighted, but their disposition was amiable and their deportment exceptionally good.

"Yes, sir," they would answer, when I gave my customary order concerning clean faces. 'We'll be clean ter-morrer,' and for that once they would be clean, but not clean again until I gave the next positive order.

"Friends," and the professor now spoke to us directly, "men should weigh carefully their words. Who can tell when a hasty word will turn to plague one's self? 'Jimmy,' I said one day to the younger boy, 'you provoke me beyond endurance. Do you intend to go through life with a dirty face? Do you intend to be a dirty-faced man?' 'The child had been languid all that day. I can see now what I did not observe then, languid, spiritless, dirty. He looked up at me quickly; his black eyes peer at me yet. Ignoring my reference to the dirty-faced man, he asked:

"'Kin a dirty boy git inter heaven, teachah?"

"No, only clean children can go to heaven."

"I wants ter go ter heaven, fer I'm red ov livin'. Mam, she's in her cups 'g'in and pap's in jail. Guess these clean children in schule hain't got my mam and pap, else they wouldn't always be clean.' He looked at his little brown fingers.

"We hain't no soap in the house, teachah, an' we hain't no stove ter heat water on. We frys our bacon and hominy in a skillet, when we have any bacon, and bakes our corn pone in the ashes. Guess ef some ov these other children hadn't no soap and no hot water and had a drunk mother, their faces wouldn't be so clean frosty mornings. I breaks the ice in a pan when I washes. It's awful cold, teachah, and the dirt sticks mighty bad.

"Does God keep children out of heaven fer havin' dirty faces, ef—" the child hesitated, did not complete the sentence, but abruptly added, 'I'll have a clean face, teachah, when you see me again. I'm awful tired now, an' I didn't have no breakfast.'

"The two children turned to go, and so they did, without a word from me. My heart was in my throat, remorse was in my soul. 'I will apologize to-morrow in some way,' I said to myself; but no dirty children came on the morrow, nor yet the next day, nor the next. Never again did those little ones, dirty nor clean, come to school, hand in hand, as was their wont, never." A tear glistened in the teacher's eye.

"One morning a gentle knock sounded on the school-room door, just such a knock as ushered in the children that first day, and, strangely enough, I thought of Jimmy and his brother before opening the door. In stepped the brother alone. He stood before me with clean face, but his countenance was peaked and thin, very thin. 'Teachah,' he said, 'Jimmy wants yer ter come an' see him.'

"Why did he not come with you, Johnny?"

"He can't come. He's dead."

"Could any blow have crushed more directly on my heart? I stood stupefied. 'Tell me about it, child.'

"Jim took the fever the nex' day after you told him 'bout heaven. He died this mornin'. But he knowed he war goin' ter die, an' he said ter me,

"Brothah, I wants ter go ter heaven, whar thar ain't no dirt, ner fights, ner whiskey. Take the quartah the teachah giv us back, an' buy soap with it an' scrub the shanty floah an' my duds, an' wash me clean, fer I may die sudden." An' I did, teachah, an' the good doctor brought Jim some fruit and some goodies, but 'twant no use.

"He war awful hungry all his life, but when the goodies come, et war too late, and he couldn't eat. He jest laid still an' fingered the orange an' then handed et to me. 'Eat et, Johnny, an' let me see yer eat et.' I did, teachah. Thar warn't no one in the room but Jim'n me, an' he laid still an' smiled es pleasant like es ef he had eaten et himself. This mornin' Jim sed, sed he, 'Brothah, wash me clean an' put the sheet on the bed.' We nain't but one sheet, teachah. An' then he said, 'I wants a clean face, fer I'm goin' ter try an' git inter heaven, brothah, an' when I'm dead, tuck the clean sheet close 'bout me, an' comb my hair, an' then go fer the teachah. Tell him ter come an' see how clean I am in the new clean sheet, an' ax him ef he thinks I'll git inter heaven.'"

"The child stopped. I could not speak. He mistook my emotion for a denial of his request.

"Please, teachah. You told Jimmy how ter get ter heaven, an' he war clean when he died. Won't you come an' see him?"

Professor Drake covered his face with his hands. More than one rough face about that Stringtown grocery stove was tear-streaked.

BURNING OUR PURSE STRING AT BOTH ENDS.

(This is true of the entire South.)

The little town of Pawtucket, in Rhode Island, has one hundred and thirty-one inventors—one hundred and thirty-one men and boys who have patented that number of useful articles and appliances, says the North Mississippi Herald.

Rhode Island has a compulsory school law. A man is compelled by that law to educate his children.

In raw material and natural resources Rhode Island is poor beyond compare with Mississippi. Yet with her manner of education her people have turned to manufacture and invention, and that section is now the richest spot on the continent. Mississippi spends quite as much of her comparative wealth on education as Rhode Island, yet I doubt whether there are one hundred and thirty-one inventors in the whole State.

Every town and city in the State, however, has an over-supply of brainy young fellows who have been crowded into the professions—law, dentistry, the ministry, etc. Only a very small per cent. of these have their heads above the level. Many of them will live and die failures. It is not their fault. They have the brains, the energy, the muscle and the determination to do, but there is little left when his brother lawyers or doctors get their share. So in the end he becomes listless and contented with a bare livelihood—a victim of misapplied education.

Our law-makers are largely to blame for this state of affairs. They refused to see and are still blind to future possibilities. And parents are to blame, too, for not taking up arms against the system, when each year has but added to their further discontent. The same train that carried their boy to New York or Chicago for the completion of his education as a professional man, carried also an order for a wagon from Ohio, a buggy from Indiana, a dress from New York, or a watch from Connecticut, thus lighting both ends of the purse string at the same time.

Why not teach a boy to make the things that we buy elsewhere?

"MAKE ME BRAVE."

This is said to be essentially a woman's prayer, after she has almost forgotten what it means to be carelessly, joyously happy. The time has passed when she felt that just a little farther on were the fields where the daisies and buttercups were hiding away awaiting the swift coming of her young feet to gather them into great shining masses that would feel the touch of the moist sweet lips on their gold-crowned heads. Life was for her a great expectancy. She believed—that no matter if others found the shadows and sat down in them sad-eyed and weary—she knew a way all sunshine; or if the light was ever hidden the clouds would pass so swiftly that the shadow would only intensify the returning brightness.

She prayed for happiness as confidently as she prayed for strength to go forward and enjoy. For why should it not be hers? Why was it so easy to be glad and why did she shrink from pain unless God meant that she should be happy? After a time there came surprises. Something hurt so keenly that she was startled at her capacity for suffering and there was no swift relief. It took days and months to forget the shock that came with the sorrow, and so, with a vague fear of what might be again, the heart slowly recovered until it almost ceased to feel the thrill of remembrance. But there was a little scar left that prevented the sensation of a new joy from being as keen as of old, and so, when time had brought to that heart other scars, she learned to pray—not for happiness—but—"Make me brave, brave to endure silently, patiently."

There are some things in life that appeal to us more strongly in middle life, or even in age, than they do in youth.

When the years have been few that lie behind us the outlook into the future is a long one, so long it seems that even youth can well afford to be patient until the coming of a cherished desire. Youth seems immortal, and it is only when the shadows begin to lengthen that we realize how short the time in which to gratify our human longings—to taste of the joys of a satisfied life. Hearts get hungry for heart food—so hungry that it seems cruel to think of being compelled to live without it until even that time when something greater than earthly love will satisfy completely. Something has been lost out of very many lives that only God will ever be able to repay the soul for. Is it strange, then, that the lips learn to utter the prayer that the heart knows its need of long before it ceases to pray for happiness—"Make me brave?"

And the Father who has watched so tenderly and faithfully over that life struggle, who has been able, as no other can ever do—to look down into the depths of the soul and has recognized its hunger, its insatiable craving for what should be the portion of every happy life, and who has seen the splendid fight that has been carried on to enable it to keep sweet and true in spite of its condition of helplessness to satisfy its hunger—surely will give strength to bear and a power of endurance that will be its salvation.

We are cowards—all of us—under certain conditions. It is easy to be brave when it is not our enemy that must lead the fight. Camp life with the enemy miles away is not conducive to panic and disaster. It is when the bugle sounds and shot and shell fall like rain that the soldier need pray, "Make me brave." So it is in every life; it is seeing the dearest things cut down around us, it is losing one by one the objects we prized most and loved the best, it is realizing that the battle is almost over and we have been crippled for life by the losses we have sustained that calls for bravery. There is no time then to pray for a cessation of hostilities, just time to send on the quick wings of our faith the simple words, "Make me brave."—Burlington Hawkeye.

"Prohibition is the only live issue in our State politics to-day. It is the only question of any importance upon which our State politicians can get up an issue. The Democratic office hunters dare not take sides; they avoid the all-impending questions of prohibition. days when we are dying and be sufficient for us until we realize the bright and triumphant advent of a heavenly welcome.

The Long, Long Journey.

The simile of death as a long journey away from the family fireside is very striking. When a man takes a long earthly journey, he is very apt to gather his family about him and say, "If I should take this journey, in all probability I will return home at such and such a time," or if the father is going into a new country to establish another home he says to his children: "After I am settled there and find everything all right you can sell the goods and pack up and come to me. I will be in such and such a place at such and such a time." Or perhaps the man who is about to take a long journey will do as my father and myself did when we started on our journey around the world. We were to set sail from San Francisco and go by the way of the Sandwich Islands, Samoa, Australia and India. It was a long, hard journey, and mother was physically unable to undertake it. So father said: "Mother, you take the two girls and go to Europe and meet Frank and myself as we come around the world. Meet us either at Brindisi or in Paris or London." So mother set sail from New York and went east. Father and myself set sail from San Francisco, going west. We were all to meet by a preconcerted plan at the French capital.

My brother, as you must take this long journey through the valley of the shadow of death with the divine passport in your hands, how can you ever expect to rejoin your loved ones unless you make previous arrangements with them where to meet? Having a letter of credit at the Bank of Grace, you say you expect to journey to the Celestial City. Have you ever told your loved ones about that city? Have you ever told them how to get to that center of the universe? Have you ever told them there is only one way to reach your destination, and that is for them to obtain forgiveness of their sins by the blood of the Lamb, so that their heavenly advent shall be made possible? If it is important for you to make spiritual preparations for the journey of death by being washed in the Saviour's blood, is it not just as important for your loved ones to be cleansed by the same blood? You should tell your loved ones how they can be cleansed from sin as surely as the guide, many years ago, told the traveler how his body could be cleansed as he became covered over with a swarm of leeches when he was fording a shallow river in Burma. In horror the foreigner began to pull them off, for the vampires were draining away his life's strength. But the guide bade him cease or he would destroy himself. Then the guide prepared a bath in which he diluted some herbs, the juices of which were fatal to the life of the leech. Then he directed the traveler to lie down in the prepared waters, and immediately his body was freed from the vile aquatic worms. Have you ever told your loved ones that the only way they can meet you in heaven is by bathing themselves in the blood of the Lamb, so that the fatal worm of sin which is sucking at their hearts shall fall off and die?

I would plead with you, men and women, who are trying to set your house in order, to look after the spiritual welfare of your loved ones as well as your own, because I do not understand how heaven can ever be a truly and entirely happy place for any man who has neglected to look after the spiritual interests of those who on earth were near and dear to him. I know that the Bible distinctly declares that heaven is to be a bright and a happy place; but, for one, I think that even celestial happiness would be marred if, when we are safely there, we were conscious that our loved ones had missed their opportunity of coming in through our own neglect to tell them the way to the great white throne. I well remember in our journey around the world how the heart ached when in faroff Australia father and I received a cablegram that mother was sick and had to return to America and could not meet us in Paris. I well remember how anxiously we two, 12,000 miles from home, looked at each other. Then we began to worry about the illness which some months later ended my mother's earthly life. And, oh, if we were disappointed by not meeting my mother in the French capital, how much more disappointed will some of us be, when we reach heaven, if we should feel that our brothers and sisters and husbands and wives, fathers and mothers and children, should have been in any way prevented joining us in heaven and especially if the obstacle has been one of our making! For my own part, I can sympathize a great deal with the prayer a weeping wife once made by the bedside of her husband, whom she supposed to be asleep. With the tears raining down her cheeks she said: "O God, save my husband! Save my dear, dear husband! And, if by any means my own sinful life has made him turn his back upon thee, then blot out my name from the book of life, if thou wilt! Only save him!" My brother and sister, preparing for the great and eternal journey beyond the grave, I beg of you at this critical time to look after the spiritual interests of your loved ones and those who are near to you.

But there is one overwhelming thought about my text upon which I love to dwell. If we go to the throne of grace in the right spirit of prayer, God will let every one of us live as long as is necessary to do the work he wants us to do in his name. When the prophet Isaiah entered the royal palace of Jerusalem and said to the sick Hezekiah, "Thus saith the Lord, set thine house in order, for thou shalt die," the king turned his face toward the wall and began to weep. Hezekiah was not weeping because he had to die. He was not afraid to die. But he wept because he could not accomplish for God and his people that which seemed necessary for him to do. Then, in answer to Hezekiah's prayer, God said to Isaiah the prophet, "Go and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the Lord the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer; I have seen thy tears. Behold, I will add unto thy days fifteen years." So today, if, like Hezekiah, we will pray in the right spirit, God will let most of us live long enough to carry the gospel message to all of our dear ones as well as to spiritually prepare for our own eternal journey. But as our earthly time is short, in order to make this spiritual preparation ourselves and to help make the spiritual preparation of our loved ones by bringing them to the Saviour, we must consecrate ourselves to the Lord's service now. By the power of the Holy Spirit we must consecrate our lives to God's work as we have never consecrated them before. We must so eat and drink and breathe and talk and pray that we shall make Christ the supreme ruler of our lives so that in all things we may do nothing inconsistent with our allegiance to him. Are you and I like Hezekiah—ready to surrender our lives entirely to the Divine Master's will?

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining room, reading room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu-

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Editorial.

BRO. RICHARD S. PAULETT.

Nearly eleven years ago I was sent to be the pastor of the church at Farmville. When I arrived I received a most hearty greeting from the members, but I found the church as much concerned about another matter, as they were about receiving a new pastor. Nearly every member with whom I conversed was very anxious about the condition of one of the members, who had just undergone a most serious and painful operation at the hospital. I had never seen a people more universally solicitous for the welfare of one of their number. On every side it was said: "If he dies there is nobody to take his place." That man was Bro. R. S. Paulett. He recovered, and for more than a decade God spared his life to continue to be a leader of His people in that charge. I saw him last on Monday, September 1st. He was in good spirits and apparently in good health. He met me as I came into his office with that genuine, hearty welcome, which his old pastors so well remember, and although busy with a number of details, entered at once into conversation on his favorite topic, the condition of the church in Farmville and throughout the Conference. As I left him I thought of the many years that had passed since the time the church feared that his work on earth was done, and of how much he had done since that time, and how strong he still seemed to be. I heard nothing of his sickness until I picked up the paper, and was shocked by the notice of his death. Nothing but pressing engagements, coming at the hour set for the funeral, joined with sudden personal disability, would have prevented my attendance at his funeral to show my high appreciation of his character. I know just how our brethren in Farmville feel about his departure. One and all they are saying, "Who will take his place?" just as they said it years ago. No one will take his place. Some one will be chairman of the board of stewards, and the work will go on. God will provide leaders for His work. Moses died and Joshua led Israel into Canaan. But Joshua was not Moses, and he never could have done the work of Moses. Bro. Paulett has done his own work at Farmville, and it will abide as a part of the foundation upon which others will build. During his term as chairman of the board the work has made great progress. The church and Sunday school room have both been enlarged and beautified, the pastor's salary and the offerings for missions and other causes have steadily increased. In every advance step Bro. Paulett was found in the lead. His pastors never found it necessary to convince him that the church should plan liberal things. He was always willing not only to give liberally, but after having given, he did not hesitate to exhort others personally. He was greatly interested in the building of a new parsonage (much needed) at an early date, and had told the board that he could not live long, but he wanted to know that a good modern house would be built for the use of the pastors of the church, and that he would pay one-seventh of the cost. His interest in church affairs, however, was not confined to the local work. He was a regular attendant upon the sessions of the Annual Conference, and his brethren showed their appreciation of him by electing him a delegate to the General Conferences of 1894 and 1898, and an alternate to that of 1902.

"He was a good man." He has gone on before to rejoice in eternal blessedness with Warren and Dunnington and Elam and others who have blessed Farmville with their labors in years gone by. We print below the resolutions passed by the Farmville Tobacco Board, which show the estimate of him by his business associates, and which also show that even among business men he was recognized as not only conspicuous for his business ability, but as conspicuous also for his piety. The true Christian is always more conspicuous for his piety than for any other thing in life. Bro. Paulett was a conspicuous Christian. May his life stimulate many in his family and in his Church to be as he was—conspicuous not only in the things of the world, but in the things of God. J. C., Jr.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a called meeting of the Farmville Tobacco Board, held October 8, 1902, a committee having been previously appointed to present suitable resolutions in regard to the death of Mr. R. S. Paulett, which occurred at his residence on High street, at about 4 o'clock P. M., on October 7, 1902, in the 83d year of his age, the said committee presented the following, which was read, unanimously approved and ordered to be spread on the minutes of the Tobacco Board:

Mr. R. S. Paulett, the subject of these resolutions, has been a citizen of the town of Farmville for a little over half a century, and in all that time has been actively engaged in business pursuits until about three weeks before his death. As a commission merchant, dealer in tobacco, president of Planters Bank, and for many years president of the Farmville Tobacco Board, and president of the board of stewards of the Methodist church, and in all of these positions he discharged his duty honestly and with wonderful business ability.

He possessed the happy faculty of conducting his business smoothly and at the same time with a humor and honesty that continually drew friends around him.

As president of the board of stewards of the Methodist church of Farmville, he was a leader that had the confidence and esteem of the whole congregation, and was always ready and willing to contribute his full share to any object that was for the good of the church and the glory of the God he delighted to serve. But his liberality in this direction was not confined to his own church, but as he was frequently a delegate to the Annual and General Conference, he was always ready with open hand and a generous heart to contribute to any cause that was for the good of the Church at large.

Our friend and brother, R. S. Paulett, has laid down the burdens of life and passed to his reward, but he has left our community in mourning, for it can be truly said of him that a noble and sweet spirited man has been taken from our midst; therefore,

Resolved, first, That while we bow with perfect resignation to the will of our Heavenly Father, who is too wise to err and too good to be unjust, nevertheless we feel that we have lost a true friend, wise and sympathetic adviser; unselfish in his dealings with his fellow-men, he was always ready to extend a helping hand to those that were trying to help themselves; or others who, on account of affliction of any character, were unable to do so, and while we feel the great loss we have suffered as a tobacco board, and feel that we will sorely miss him, yet we trust that a kind providence will raise up another to take his place, for he was in deed and in truth an inspiration to the entire trade. When shall we see his like again?

Resolved, second, That we extend to his immediate family and numerous friends our hearty sympathies in this sad hour of their bereavement, hoping that his pure life may be an inspiration to them to live such a life as that they may be again united with him and the Saviour he followed in that beautiful land beyond, where we shall have no more pain or parting.

Resolved, third, That the secretary be instructed to furnish the family with a copy of these resolutions, The Farmville Herald, Southside Examiner, Methodist Recorder and the Richmond Christian Advocate, and that they also be spread upon the minutes of our Tobacco Board.

Resolved, fourth, That members of this Tobacco Board attend the funeral of our friend and brother as a body.

The president of the Canadian Dominion Alliance for the Total Suppression of the Liquor Traffic considers the inauguration of a great pledge-signing campaign most important. It is believed that such a campaign throughout Canada, similar to that of Great Britain and Ireland, would add impetus to the movement for the collateral reform of prohibition.

It is said that the German Minister of Education has issued an instruction to the national school authorities throughout the fatherland, urging the necessity of the popular enlightenment of children as to the deleterious effects of the excessive consumption of alcoholic liquors. He insists that every school ought to take part in the struggle against the pernicious evil of drunkenness.

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

"These chaps are easily stirred up," he would say, "and I am anxious that they should know exactly what they are doing. It is far too serious a business to trifle with."

Although Graeme did not go down stairs to the meetings, he could not but feel the throb of the emotion beating in the heart of the community. I used to detail for his benefit and sometimes for his amusement the incidents of each night, but I never felt quite easy in dwelling upon the humorous features in Mrs. Mavor's presence, although Craig did not appear to mind. His manner with Graeme was perfect. Openly anxious to win him to his side, he did not improve the occasion and vex him with exhortation. He would not take him at a disadvantage, though, as I afterward found, this was not his sole reason for his method. Mrs. Mavor, too, showed herself in a wise and tender light. She might have been his sister, so frank was she and so openly affectionate, laughing at his fretfulness and soothing his weariness.

Never were better comrades than we four, and the bright days speeding so swiftly on drew us nearer to one another. But the bright days came to an end, for Graeme, when once he was able to go about, became anxious to get back to the camp. And so the last day came, a day I remember well. It was a bright, crisp winter day.

The air was shimmering in the frosty light. The mountains, with their shining heads piercing through the light clouds into that wonderful blue of the western sky and their feet pushed into the pine masses, gazed down upon Black Rock with calm, kindly looks on their old gray faces. How one grows to love them, steadfast old friends! Far up among the pines we could see the smoke of the engine at the works, and so still and so clear was the mountain air that we could hear the puff of the steam and from far down the river the murmur of the rapids. The majestic silence, the tender beauty, the peace, the loneliness, too, came stealing in upon us as we three, leaving Mrs. Mavor behind us, marched arm in arm down the street. We had not gone far on our way when Graeme, turning round, stood a moment looking back, then waved his hand in farewell. Mrs. Mavor was at her window, smiling and waving in return. They had grown to be great friends, these two, and seemed to have arrived at some understanding. Certainly Graeme's manner to her was not that he bore to other women. His half quizzical, somewhat superior air of mocking devotion gave place to a simple, earnest, almost tender respect, very new to him, but very winning.

As he stood there waving his farewell I glanced at his face and saw for a moment what I had not seen for years, a faint flush on Graeme's cheek and a light of simple, earnest faith in his eyes. It reminded me of my first look of him when he had come up for his matriculation to the varsity. He stood on the campus looking up at the noble old pile, and there was the same bright, trustful, earnest look on his boyish face.

I know not what spirit possessed me—it may have been the pain of the memory working in me—but I said coarsely enough:

"It's no use, Graeme, my boy. I would fall in love with her myself, but there would be no chance even for me."

The flush slowly darkened as he turned and said deliberately:

"It's not like you, Connor, to be an ass of that peculiar kind. Love! Not exactly! She won't fall in love unless"—And he stopped abruptly, with his eyes upon Craig.

But Craig met him with unshrinking gaze, quietly remarking, "Her heart is under the pines." And we moved on, each thinking his own thoughts and guessing at the thoughts of the others.

We were on our way to Craig's shack, and as we passed the saloon Slavin stepped from the door with a salutation. Graeme paused.

"Hello, Slavin! I got rather the worst of it, didn't I?"

Slavin came near and said earnestly: "It was a dirty trick altogether. You'll not think it was mine, Mr. Graeme."

"No, no, Slavin. You stood up like a man," said Graeme cheerfully.

"And you beat me fair, and, bedad, it was a neat one that laid me out, and there's no grudge in my heart till you."

"All right, Slavin. We'll perhaps understand each other better after this."

"And that's true for you, sir, and I'll see that your boys don't get any more than they ask for," replied Slavin, backing away.

"And I hope that won't be much," put in Mr. Craig, but Slavin only grinned.

When we came back to Craig's shack, Graeme was glad to rest in the big chair.

Craig made him a cup of tea, while I smoked, admiring much the deft neatness of the minister's housekeeping and the gentle, almost motherly, way he had with Graeme.

In our talk we drifted into the future, and Craig let us see what were his ambitions. The railway was soon to come. The resources were as yet unexplored, but enough was known to assure a great future for British Columbia. As he talked his enthusiasm grew and carried us away. With the eye of a general he surveyed the country, fixed the strategic points which the church must seize upon. Eight good men would hold the country from Fort Steele to the coast and from Kootenai to Caribou.

"The church must be in with the railway. She must have a hand in the shaping of the country. If society crystallizes without her influence, the country is lost, and British Columbia will be another trapdoor to the bottomless pit."

"What do you propose?" I asked.

"Organizing a little congregation here in Black Rock."

"How many will you get?"

"Don't know."

"Pretty hopeless business," I said.

"Hopeless! Hopeless!" he cried.

"There were only twelve of us at first to follow him, and rather a poor lot they were. But he braced them up, and they conquered the world."

"But surely things are different," said Graeme.

"Things? Yes, yes, but he is the same."

His face had an exalted look, and his eyes were gazing into faraway places.

"A dozen men in Black Rock, with some real grip of him, would make things go. We'll get them, too," he went on in growing excitement. "I believe in my soul we'll get them."

"Look here, Craig. If you organize, I'd like to join," said Graeme impulsively. "I don't believe much in your creed or your church, but I'll be blown if I don't believe in you."

Craig looked at him with wistful eyes and shook his head.

"It won't do, old chap, you know. I can't hold you. You've got to have a grip of some one better than I am, and then, besides, I hardly like asking you now." He hesitated. "Well, to be out and out, this step must be taken not for my sake or for any man's sake, and I fancy that perhaps you feel like pleasing me just now a little."

"That I do, old fellow," said Graeme, putting out his hand. "I'll be hanged if I won't do anything you say."

"That's why I won't say," replied Craig. Then reverently he added: "The organization is not mine. It is my Master's."

"When are you going to begin?" asked Graeme.

"We shall have our communion service in two weeks, and that will be our roll call."

"How many will answer?" I asked doubtfully.

"I know of three," he said quietly.

"Three! There are 200 miners and 150 lumbermen. Three!" And Graeme looked at him in amazement. "You think it worth while to organize three?"

"Well," replied Craig, smiling for the first time, "the organization won't be elaborate, but it will be effective, and, besides, loyalty demands obedience."

We sat long that afternoon talking, shrinking from the breaking up, for we knew that we were about to turn down a chapter in our lives which we should delight to linger over in after days, and in my life there is but one brighter. At last we said goodby and drove away, and, though many farewells have come in between that day and this, none is so vividly present to me as that between us three men. Craig's manner with me was solemn enough.

"He that loveth his life"—goodby. Don't fool with this," was what he said to me, but when he turned to Graeme his whole face lighted up. He took him by the shoulders and gave him a little shake, looking into his eyes and saying over and over in a low, sweet tone:

"You'll come, old chap, you'll come, you'll come. Tell me you'll come."

And Graeme could say nothing in reply, but only looked at him. Then they silently shook hands, and we drove off, but long after we had got over the mountain and into the winding forest road on the way to the lumber camp the voice kept vibrating in my heart, "You'll come, you'll come," and there was a hot pain in my throat.

We said little during the drive to the camp. Graeme was thinking hard and made no answer when I spoke to him two or three times till we came to the deep shadows of the pine forest, when, with a little shiver, he said:

"It is all a tangle, a hopeless tangle."

"Meaning what?" I asked.

"This business of religion. What quaint varieties—Nelson's, Geordie's, Billy Breen's—if he has any—then Mrs. Mavor's—she is a saint, of course—and that fellow Craig's! What a trump he is! And without his religion he'd be pretty much like the rest of us. It is too much for me."

His mystery was not mine. Black Rock varieties of religion were certainly startling, but there was undoubtedly the streak of reality through them all, and that discovery I felt to be a distinct gain.

CHAPTER VII.

THE FIRST BLACK ROCK COMMUNION.

THE gleam of the great fire through the windows of the great camp gave a kindly welcome as we drove into the clearing in which the shanties stood. Graeme was greatly touched at his enthusiastic welcome by the men. At the supper table he made a little speech of thanks for their faithfulness during his absence, specially commending the care and efficiency of Mr. Nelson, who had had charge of the camp. The men cheered wildly. Baptiste's shrill voice leading all. Nelson, being called upon, expressed in a few words his pleasure at seeing the boss back and thanked the men for their support while he had been in charge.

The men were for making a night of it; but, fearing the effect upon Graeme, I spoke to Nelson, who passed the word, and in a short time the camp was quiet. As we sauntered from the grub camp to the office, where was our bed, we paused to take in the beauty of the night. The moon rode high over the peaks of the mountains, flooding the narrow valley with mellow light. Under her magic the rugged peaks softened their harsh lines and seemed to lean lovingly toward us. The dark pine masses stood silent, as in breathless adoration. The dazzling snow lay like a garment over all the open spaces in soft, waving folds and crowded every stump with a quaintly shaped nightcap. Above the camps the smoke curled up from the campfires, standing like pillars of cloud that kept watch while men slept, and high over all the deep blue night sky, with its star jewels, sprang like the roof of a great cathedral from range to range covering us in its kindly shelter. How homelike and safe seemed the valley, with its mountain sides, its sentinel trees and arching roof of jeweled sky! Even the night seemed kindly, and friendly the stars, and the lone cry of the wolf from the deep forest seemed like the voice of a comrade.

"How beautiful! Too beautiful!" said Graeme, stretching out his arms. "A night like this takes the heart out of me."

I stood silent, drinking in at every sense the night, with its wealth of loveliness.

"What is it I want?" he went on. "Why does the night make my heart ache? There are things to see and things to hear just beyond me. I cannot get to them."

The gay, careless look was gone from his face. His dark eyes were wistful with yearning.

"I often wonder if life has nothing better for me," he continued with his headache voice.

I said no word, but put my arm within his. A light appeared in the stable. Glad of a diversion, I said:

"What is the light? Let us go and see."

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

GENESIS OF PROTESTANTISM.

Many even of the Popes, the infallible ones, the successors of St. Peter, the personification of holiness upon the earth, were crafty plotters, heartless and bloody tyrants or sensual voluptuaries, revelling in the delights of a typical life of the South and looking with little credence and no respect upon the mysteries of the system which they represented. "Among themselves," says Lord Macaulay, "they spoke of the Incarnation, the Eucharist and the Trinity in the same tone in which Cotta and Velleins talked of the oracle of Delphi or the voice of Faunus in the mountains. Their years glided by in a soft dream of sensual and intellectual voluptuousness. Choice cookery, delicious wines, lovely women, hounds, falcons, horses, newly discovered manuscripts of the classics, sonnets and burlesque romances in the sweet Tuscan—just as licentious as a fine sense of the graceful would permit—these things were the delight and even the serious business of their lives."

The condition of the people was pitiable indeed. Oppressed in turn by priest, bishop and papal legate, there sprang up in time a feeling of distrust, and finally of hatred toward the whole system. What with the penances, the fastings, the endless round of masses, tilth, images, saints, relics, etc., the primal principle—nay, even the very object of Christianity—seemed forgotten. All thought of the original purity of religion, save in a few hearts here and there in remote obscurity, seemed to have vanished, and the whole fabric was rotten to the core. The sale of indulgences was a fruitful source of revenue to the Church. No sin was too great, no crime too foul to be pardoned by the payment of a sufficient sum of money. A man desires to rid himself of his enemy, or to commit a blacker crime than murder against a defenceless woman. All that is necessary is a stipulated sum paid to Rome in exchange for a permit for the crime, and no law of God or man can harm him. The heart sickens and the mind well-nigh reels as one reads the records of such representatives of Him who "was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil." Theft, murder, incest, adultery, covetousness, perjury, all the sins of the first chapter of Paul's letter to the Romans are none so heinous that money will not purchase their pardon in advance and a permit for their foul commission. What has become of the doctrines of the Bible, of the teachings of that lowly one who "went about doing good?" What a contrast between the Sermon on the Mount and the withering curses of the papal bulls, pronounced upon the slightest provocation! And as a climax of the abomination of desolation, we see two successors of St. Peter hurling their anathemas at one another, each claiming to be the divinely appointed vice gerent of God on earth, and each consigning the other to the lowest depths to perdition.

Notice other fearful elements of a far apostasy. The end justifies the means. Lying, murder, theft, perjury, any sin becomes commendable and right if done for the sake of the Church, and "pious frauds" are commended by the highest authorities. Well nigh infinite had been the fall of the Church of God from its pristine purity. Not repentance and a change of heart marked the liberation of the soul from the greatest sins; but fastings and flagellations, pilgrimages and prayers to images indicate the essential character of the Christianity of the Middle Ages. No genuine faith was necessary, no knowledge even of the fundamental principles of salvation was required, but religion consisted merely in a round of observances and a succession of ceremonies. Mere outward deeds having no spiritual motive or character were sufficient to appease heaven. A present to the Pope or to a cardinal was held to be far more acceptable to God, and far more trustworthy for salvation than any broken or contrite heart or the most confiding faith in Christ. Man was justified by works alone, and these works often of the worst character.

The first streaks of coming dawn appeared in the fifteenth century, when the temporal power of the Pope began to wane at the same time that his spiritual sovereignty was being slowly undermined. This was due to two causes—first, the consolidation of each nation within itself, the segregation of its peoples into one government, the crystallization of its own peculiar language, customs, laws and institutions, and thus the rising of the national spirit which chafed under the domination of a foreign prince. The other reason was that the Popes had descended from that high ideal station of ecclesiastical supremacy over the world, and had become political intriguers, striving to secure fortunes and dukedoms for their family relations and their bastard sons. As soon as the Pope became a squabbler for earthly principalities, the charm of his power was broken, and especially in the north of Europe "the breach of feeling and sympathy went on widening, so that all Germany, England, Scotland and other countries started like giants out of their sleep at the first blast of Luther's trumpet."

The Reformation, although religious in its character, was not an isolated event, but was part of the great movement of society out of the darkness of the Middle Ages. It was at this time that the discovery of the magnetic needle enabled adventurers to sail to unknown lands, that the invention of gunpowder changed the whole aspect of warfare, equalizing in the field the peasant and the knight, and that the invention of the art of printing rendered learning vastly more widespread. The discovery of a new continent and the passage around the Cape of Good Hope opened new fields to commerce. Extending their efforts beyond the earth, men searched the heavens and the solar system was made known. Works of art and masters of learning had been brought from the East by the fall of Constantinople. It was the age of Raphael, of Michael Angelo, and of Albert Durer. Monarchy was triumphing over feudalism and nations were becoming more and more consolidated. Scholasticism and the reign of the later Church fathers, whose writings had been held superior even to the Scriptures themselves, were about to pass away. It is true that the creed of the Church was reduced to a tangible form by scholasticism, and that by it enthusiasm and superstition had been curbed to an extent, but scholasticism had done its work, and must give way to the purer forms of thought. Another blow to the Papacy, and by no means a slight one was the multiplication of books by the revival of learning and the introduction of the Scriptures and early Church fathers, which were brought in by the Eastern scholars in the original tongues and compared with the misleading and perverted translations then in vogue in Europe.

Time would fail us to discuss the many specific omens which preceded the Reformation. We can do no more than mention a few of them. Such were the anti-sacerdotal sects as the Albigenses of Languedoc, who sprang up in the twelfth century, and the Waldenses, who claimed to have descended from apostolic times and never to have consented to the unholy union of Church and State under Constantine. Although most of these latter were of the poorer and ignorant classes, they showed the widespread disaffection with the existing order of things, and a craving for the restoration to true and pure Christianity.

The Conservative Reformers throughout different sections of Europe, in carrying on the battle against the rottenness of the Church, showed the errors, crimes and usurpation of authority by the Popes. Theirs, however, was a reform of morals, not of doctrine. Their object was to reform the Church, not to split from it. We find also many radical reformers, before Luther's time. Wicliffe, Huss, Wessel, Savonarola, although suppressed by the iron hands of the Inquisition, had left many behind them to perpetuate the doctrine they had sealed with their blood. Again, in the Mystics, do we see that disgust with the state of the Church, and that yearning for the pure religion of the Scriptures. They called men's minds from the outward observance of a dogmatic belief to that pure inward state of communion and peace with holy thoughts. Colet, More, and Erasmus, each by their great influence, combatted every form of superstition and ignorance. The latter by his shafts of wit and keen satire, did much to show the Church system in its true light, and to deprive the people of still more of their respect for their spiritual advisers. Erasmus was a true humanist. "He would," says Prof. Geo. P. Fisher, "have made the creed a very short one, limited to a 'few plain truths contained in Scripture,' and leaving all the rest to the individual judgment. He thought that many things should be referred not to the 'next general Council,' but to the time when we see God face to face." He would have the humblest person instructed in Church affairs and versed in the Scriptures.

Erasmus' writings, and the favor with which they were received and read, show that the European mind could no longer be bound by the ecclesiastical shackles of a foreign pontiff and was now ready to break loose from that bondage. Rome had overreached herself. The Church, which seemed so powerful in a worldly sense, was tottering on its base, and out of the debris of its fall was soon to come a return to the pure Christianity of the apostolic ages.

W. C. T. U. STATE CONVENTION.
(Reported for the Recorder.)

The twentieth annual Convention of the State W. C. T. U. of Virginia met in the Seventh Street Christian church, Richmond, October 1 at 8 P. M. The evening session began by a "promissory meeting," conducted by Mrs. M. J. Welles, a national lecturer. At the close of the hour for prayer and song, the meeting resolved itself into an informal reception, and delegates greeted one another and paid their respects to the State officers and other dignitaries present.

Wednesday morning at 9 the Executive Committee met for business, and the young women met to pray and to receive instruction as to the rights and duties of delegates. At 10 the Convention opened. Mrs. Bettie Rue of Bellhaven, was appointed recording secretary, vice Mrs. Southall, resigned. The Convention committees were appointed by the chair, and a brief report was received from the Executive Committee. The president's annual address followed. It was an excellent paper, a brief history of her relations to the society during the past four years, and a statement of the work of the past year. She and Mr. Hoge have given ten weeks of time to the State work, visiting fifty-two unions, eighteen of which were "Y's," organizing three W's and one Y. The net gain in membership for 1902 is 384 active members, making a total of 2,756 members. Twenty unions have died, however. The president pointed out the following gains to the cause during the past year: The passing of a scientific temperance instruction law in the State of Georgia, the admission of women to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, the New Hebrides bill, which forbids the carrying of intoxicating drinks to the islands, of Mr. Paton; that the anti-canteen law was not repealed because of the many petitions for its life, and that tea and milk had been added to the list of drinks in the immigrant restaurants. She recommended that greater efforts be made to organize college "Y's."

The corresponding secretary reported much work done by Mrs. Welles. An effort has been made during the year to perfect as many county unions as possible. This is a most excellent plan and will no doubt result in far more efficient work at less cost of time and money. Just now, in the beginning, it is very confusing, and the secretary found great difficulty in collecting proper data for her report. Until now the associations of unions has been by districts, which had no definite bounds. The county plan distinctly outlines the territory of each group of local societies.

The report of the treasurer was not ite complete because she had been lled to the deathbed of her son in a raway State before it was time to ose the books. They were in excel- nt order to the date of her departure, d indicated a wholesome balance in e treasury.

The editor of the State paper report- an encouraging increase in the sub- scription list. To one in active service e paper is a necessity. It contains he official notices and reports, as ll as many other items of news.

The afternoon of Wednesday was ven up to a "Y" conference. There re two-minute reports from "Y" esidents in attendance, and sugges- ns for better work next year. There s a paper about plans for making etings more interesting, and an- er about the graduation of "Y's" o W's. There are obvious sons in its favor. The last hour of afternoon was made interesting by s Anna Gordon's answers to ques- s asked by those present. The "question of privilege" had been so many and of such a nature, that the body was in what would have been called an uproar if it had been a political meeting of men, and people were crowding in to see what was the matter. The delegate standing upon her privilege, the pastor at last made an effort to settle the matter by urging her to pocket the evidence. Upon a refusal, he declared it must be done or he must ask the Convention to seek another meeting place. The delegate yielded, out of courtesy to the pastor, and upon receiving the promise that the Executive Committee would take the matter up. If it was taken up, the committee settled the question without evidence, which is still in the possession of the accuser. The Convention proceeded to vote and the old officers were "vindicated" by a large majority. As there was no Recording Secretary to re-elect, Mrs. W. J. Maybee was elected. The balloting was not finished until the afternoon session. The Executive Committee brought in the list of nominations of its successors, and, with few exceptions, it was the "present incumbents" again.

The evening session was for entertainment, a programme of good music and recitations, and an address by Miss Gordon. Miss Smith, Y secretary, received a gift of pearls in a brooch.

Friday morning reports of officers were heard. The Y secretary reported for 26 unions, and noted dues from four others, against 46 reporting to her predecessor.

Mrs. R. H. Jones, of Norfolk, chosen as vice-president at large, was introduced.

Mrs. R. A. Brown discussed the matter of the literature provided to teach the doctrines of non-alcoholic medication.

Mrs. Bates presented what is really one of the best kinds of work done by the society, that among Sunday school children. It is good to teach a child in his youth the importance of total abstinence, and it is good to associate the work with his Sunday school and church.

The securing of homes for homeless children was ably discussed by Mrs. Maybee, the newly elected Recording Secretary.

The reports were continued during a brief afternoon session. The most memorable number on the afternoon programme was the tender of their loyalty by a representative of the young women who had brought in the despised petition, and whose spokeswoman had made in their behalf the charges of official violation of the laws of the society. This unexpected change of front came about at a private meeting of the young people, at which they were urged to be sweet and "be loyal to the white ribbon," and to the teachings of Frances Willard. All but two of the party agreed to the turn-around, to support the present administration and not to criticise the general officers, so it is probable there will not be much talk about the difficulties just past.

"Demonstration night," always enjoyable, was, perhaps, more brilliant than usual. There were banners for the unions having made the greatest gains in membership, a diamond brooch for the president, and a case of silver and gold spoons for Mrs. Jobson, once Y secretary. With many felicitations the Convention of 1902 adjourned. There is peace in the Virginia W. C. T. U. Is it an honorable peace?

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

I am at Wytheville, where Holston Conference is in session. The weather is superb. So far we have had harmony. Bishop Morrison is a business man, and he is conducting the business rapidly without rushing. He is not merely a Methodist; he is a Christian; he is not merely a Bishop, "he's a man for a' that."

In the College of Bishops he stood for inflexible honesty in the publishing house affair. He didn't desert. He didn't "knock under." He would have carried out the pledge of the Bishops if he could have done so.

The Holston Conference Historical Society was reorganized by electing Dr. D. Sullins, president; Rev. W. C. Carden secretary; Rev. James O. Straley, treasurer.

Some action will be taken at the present session looking to the prosecution of the work of getting up and out a history of Holston Methodism. Volume I. will probably be issued the coming year.

Rev. John Boring, who has been a member of Conference for fifty-one years, preached his semi-centennial sermon last Wednesday night to a crowded and anxiously expectant house. Boring is seventy-six years old. The sermon dwelt on the knowledge of sins forgiven and the filial relation to God. It was earnest, humorous, witty, pathetic, powerful. It is an epoch in one's life to hear such a sermon. It swept the deck. The tears—showers of them—the handshakings, and the shouts which followed, showed that the sermon had stirred the mighty depths of the soul. Boring is unique and original, and his faith is omnipotent.

Friday Bishop Walden, of the M. E. Church, was introduced and made some appropriate fraternal remarks, and the reply of Bishop Morrison was equally fraternal and appropriate. Bishop Walden is holding in the town the colored Holston Conference. So the M. E.'s draw the color line as we do. Theories have to bow to conditions.

While I am writing, the town is crowded with country people, here to attend the circus. Scarcely anything draws like a circus. The love of the wonderful and the love of amusement has brought hundreds of rusty dollars from their hiding places.

Many connectional officers are here to represent the interests of their respective departments of work.

A considerable number of middle aged men of families have been received into Conference—some of them from other denominations. It looks as if Methodism is about to absorb everything.

To-morrow the entire Conference will be conveyed to Emory and Henry College to look at it—its farm, campus, buildings, libraries, literary halls, etc. They will doubtless be feasted at the expense of the college. The expense of the excursion will be borne by the college. The institution has opened better this year than for many years.

FORGIVING.

"We can forgive the one who injures us," said a wise student of human nature; "the one whom we find it almost impossible to forgive is the one whom we have injured."

We do not state the case in that way to ourself; nevertheless it is true. There is nothing that will more surely incline us to dislike another than the knowledge that we have in some way wronged him. His acts, whatever they may be, take on unworthy motives to us. It is easy to believe any evil report concerning him. The sight of him awakens our animosity. Why? Because deep in the spirit, too deep for our conscious recognition of it, perhaps, lies a desire to justify ourself and to prove that he deserved the treatment we had given him. For the one who has wronged us we may find excuses, but the one for whom we have even a secret suspicion of having wronged there is solace in finding condemnation. The sight of him makes us uncomfortable; his presence wounds our self-respect. We cannot forgive him for making it impossible to forgive ourself.

What has he ever done to you? is the question commonly asked when an unexplained enmity manifest itself. A question we might profitably ask ourself would be, What have we ever done to him?—Christian Uplook.

AWAY WITH THE SALOON.

This is the war cry of the Home Defence Army, a simple, business-like, non-partisan organization of temperance voters, which has grown out of the Anti-Saloon League movement.

The idea of the army is that the decisive battle in the war for the destruction of the saloon is to be fought, not between parties, but within the parties. Its plan is to enroll and organize all voters who wish to make their votes count in favor of better temperance laws and officials who will enforce them.

Temperance workers who will volunteer to act as recruiting officers wanted everywhere, immediately. Each worker will be supplied with a pocket enrolling book containing directions for the work, and explanation of principles. Though only voters can be enrolled, any trustworthy friend of temperance can act as a recruiting officer. Persons applying for enrolling books will please have their application endorsed by a pastor or other well-known temperance worker as a safeguard against books falling into unfriendly hands.

For books and information write to Rev. C. H. Crawford, 1112 E. Main street, Richmond, Va.

LESSON IV, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 26.

Text of the Lesson, Josh. xiv, 5-15.
Memory Verses, 12-14—Golden Text,
Josh. xiv, 14—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

5. As the Lord commanded Moses so the children of Israel did, and they divided the land.

While at one time there remained yet very much land to be possessed, yet in due time the Lord gave unto Israel all the land which He swore to give unto their fathers, and they possessed it and dwelt therein. There failed not aught of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel. All came to pass. The Lord gave them rest, the Lord delivered all their enemies into their hand. The Lord God of Israel fought for Israel. They had only to obediently go forward (xiii, 1; xxi, 43-45; x, 42).

6. Thou knowest the thing that the Lord said unto Moses the man of God concerning me and thee in Kadesh-barnea.

Thus said Caleb, Joshua's old companion, when together they went with the other ten to spy out the land, as he now appears before Joshua on behalf of Judah, to which tribe he belonged (Num. xiii, 6). It is refreshing, whether in the Bible story or in the daily life of our own day, to meet people who believe God, who desire only to know what God has said and who rest on a "thus saith the Lord" as on the solid rock.

7, 8. I brought him word again as it was in my heart. I wholly followed the Lord my God.

He looks back with gratitude to the time when he was a young man, forty years of age, and praises the grace of God which enabled him to be sincere before God and to follow Him fully. This is the only thing on which one can look back with real comfort as we advance in years—that without any thought of man's frown or favor we have been able to stand humbly, but sincerely, with God.

9. The land whereon thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance and thy children's forever.

All through the wilderness wanderings, as the many thousands died who were men when Joshua and Caleb spied out the land, Caleb held fast the word of Jehovah by the mouth of Moses that whoever else might die His servant Caleb would enter the land and possess it, because he wholly followed the Lord. We think of Paul in the storm at sea when all hope was given up, saying to the souls on that ship as he gave them the Lord's message, "I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me" (Acts xxvii, 25).

10. And now behold the Lord hath kept me alive, as He said, these forty and five years.

Caleb realized the truth of these words, though not written in his day: "He giveth to all life and breath and all things, for in Him we live and move and have our being" (Acts xvii, 25, 28). He is the God in whose hand our breath is and whose are all our ways (Dan. v, 23), but how few seem to think of this! It is well to remember that we continue from day to day only because the Lord sees fit to keep us alive. Happy are those who, like Caleb, keep themselves set apart for Himself, His own possession (Ps. iy, 3; Tit. ii, 14, R. V.).

11. As yet I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me.

Although eighty-five years of age, yet feeling as strong and well as at the age of forty! It is written of Moses that he was a hundred and twenty years old when he died. His eye was not dim nor his natural force abated (Deut. xxxiv, 7). There is a renewing of strength and youth oftentimes enjoyed by those who wait upon the Lord, but we can quietly leave it all with Him to give us all the days here in the mortal body that will be for His glory and our good.

12. If so be the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out, as the Lord said.

He asked for mountains where the giants were, for he learned as a young man that giants and walled cities were nothing to God. At the age of forty he had said: "The Lord is with us. Fear them not" (Num. xiv, 9), and in forty-five years he had found no reason to change his mind. He had no confidence in himself, but he had unbounded confidence in the Lord God.

13-15. Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb . . . because that he wholly followed the Lord God of Israel.

It is unwillingness to follow fully that hinders the Lord from working in His people as He would like to, for His eyes run to and fro through the whole earth to show Himself strong on behalf of those whose hearts are whole toward Him (II Chron. xvi, 9). But where are the whole hearts? How few seem willing to stand with God against the wisdom of this world, against culture, society, popular opinion and against the false teachers who are found in theological seminaries and in many a pulpit perhaps as never before! Hebron suggests fellowship, and the other name, Kirjath-Arba, while it means city of Arba, may mean also "the city of four," as the word arba is the Hebrew for four. Any one who follows fully as Caleb did will realize something of true fellowship with the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit and, however alone apparently, can always truthfully say, "There are four of us." This also is proved by John xiv, 17, 23. It is more than all that earth can give to be able to say, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ" (I John i, 3). Not conformed to this world, not pleasing men, but God, is the only way of peace and victory in this life.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 26, "Treating a Gracious Invitation Lightly"—Text, Matt. xxii, 1-10.

"Many are called, but few chosen."

This parable of the marriage of the king's son is one which cannot lose interest so long as it is still in process of fulfillment. It has a bearing upon our times and an application to us individually which we do well to understand and heed.

The king has made a wedding for his son and has bidden many. Those first called refused to honor the invitation and were punished for their rebellion and high treason. Then a great mixed multitude of people is summoned and come. Some are good, some are bad.

This represents the actual history of the kingdom of God on the earth down to the present time. The kinsmen of Jesus rejected Him with insult and injury and were guilty of spiritual high treason. They were as a nation justly condemned and suffered the penalty which any individual or body of men must incur by the rejection of spiritual authority. The infliction is not the less authoritative because it is the inevitable result of the working of fixed laws. Whoever commits the crime of spiritual high treason and refuses attendance at the marriage of the Crown Prince when his Sovereign commands his presence deserves to lose and will lose his estates and title as peer of the realm and receive the punishment due his disloyalty. He shall not overthrow the realm nor the succession, but shall surely be overthrown.

What a mixed multitude, to be sure, has been brought into the kingdom of God on earth during the last nineteen centuries! How true the characterization of them in the parable as both bad and good! How keen the kingly scrutiny and how inflexible His etiquette of courtly requirements!

This reminds vividly of recent scenes in Westminster abbey at the coronation of King Edward VII. How important all peers of the realm considered it that they should be present, and what care was given to securing hereditary rights and privileges! What folly it would have been for any one to have treated with contempt the king's summons! To have refused homage and the oath of fealty would have justly worked political ruin and loss of rights which belong only to loyal subjects.

The condemnation and exclusion of one who had been admitted and was not robed are equally to be expected. What excuse could be made for one who had secured entrance to the abbey and had so little regard for himself, the king and the company as to disregard and disobey the regulations regarding his robes! King Edward is said to be very observing and particular regarding the medals and decorations worn by any one present at court functions, and any carelessness or error is called to the attention of the offender. God requires no less care as to the robes of His loyal ones. Ignorance and inability cannot be pleaded in excuse. The rules can be known and all can comply. Whoever refuses should be cast out. Are you robed as the King requires?

Melancholy Is Contagious.

Nothing is more subtly contagious than melancholy; therefore it is most unkind to inflict it on a neighbor or a friend. If one feels depressed, the first obligation is to fight against the infliction, seeking out its cause, which nine times out of ten is discovered to be in physical malaise. A man has worked day in and day out beyond his capital for daily effort and has finally drawn so lavishly on his reserves that some morning he wakes up a bankrupt in nervous energy, or he has dyspepsia, a fiend incarnate in the citadel of the body. A woman has been mending and sewing and cooking and doing church work till she has overtaxed her vitality, and she vainly tries to be cheerful. Let both try the virtue of rest, of outdoor life, of congenial company, but, most of all, let both live more continually with God.—Christian Intelligencer.

Pain as a Friend.

Pain is a friend rather than a foe. It stands between extremes of life and death, calling us ever toward life. It ceases when its warning has stirred the soul to thought and remedy and brought back health, or it ceases when the battle is lost. Like a fire bell, it stops when the fire is put out or burned out. Let us not resent it. It has a kind heart, though its hands hurt. That we may know the truth and so be made free from ignorance and peril is part of the mission of pain.—Sunday School Times.

Going to the Father.

The Christian life is a going to the Father. Some travel swiftly, some long upon the road, some meet many pleasant adventures by the way, others pass through fire and peril; but though the path be short or windy and though the pace be quick or slow it is a going to the Father.—Professor Drummond.

To Be With God.

How beautiful to be with God
When earth is fading like a dream
And from this mist encircled shore
We launch upon the unknown stream

No doubt, no fear, no anxious care,
But, comforted by staff and rod,
In the faith brightened hour of death
How beautiful to be with God!

How sweet to lay the burden by,
The task inwrought with toil and pain,
Assured that He who calls will send
One better still the yoke to bear!

What peace when we have done our best
To leave the pilgrim path, long trod,
And in yon fields of asphodel,
Snow white, be evermore with God!

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teaching of All Denominations.

Our world is on the rocks; Christ in the lifeboat.—The Late Rev. Dr. De Witt Talmage.

Selfish Existence Is Death.

In the divine sight unselfish existence is life, selfish existence is death.—Rev. J. K. Smythe, Swedenborgian, New York.

The Place to Begin.

We are called to prepare the way of the Lord. Begin with your own heart.—Rev. John E. White, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

The Work Nearest at Hand.

Our obligation and opportunity is to Christianize the little world of people among whom we live.—Rev. J. R. Dwyer, Reformed Church, New York.

What the Church Must Stand For.

The church must stand not only for intellectual honesty, but for a Christian spirituality.—Rev. G. E. Cunningham, Universalist, Kansas City, Mo.

The Law of Immortality.

The survival of the fittest may be the law of nature, but the survival of the faithful is the law of immortality.—Rev. Dr. John W. Day, Unitarian, Louis.

Problems For Church to Solve.

The church of the future must solve the economic problems which now divide men into classes.—Rev. Frederick E. Hopkins, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Reason and Revelation.

The religion of the Bible is as full of reason as it is of revelation. The religion of God's word is one that appeals to the intellect of man.—Rev. Dr. J. M. Johnston, Baptist, St. Louis.

Faith's Satisfying Basis.

Only where the light of revelation shines and the teachings of that revelation are accepted does faith find a satisfying basis or hope rise into assurance.—Rev. Dr. Chivers, Baptist, Brooklyn.

The Home and Mother.

Every mother is a queen, and home is her dominion, and no ruler safely govern any people long that regards the home and mother.—Rev. Frank Woolford Sneed, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

Value of Original Affection.

We talk and sing and pray and preach a good deal about love, but cubic inch of original affection is worth a cord of homiletical eulogy on a nation.—Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York.

The Fight Against Unrighteousness.

We must fight selfishness with selfishness, hatred with love, covetousness with generosity, falsehood with truth, darkness with light. We must build up life on the positive side.—Rev. Dr. Polemas H. Swift, Methodist, Chicago.

Parasite Upon the Social Body.

The man who looks upon life with a sole view to the discovery of ways and means by which to enrich himself, who seeks his own gain first, last and all the time, is nothing but a parasite upon the social body.—Rev. L. A. Crandall, Baptist, Chicago.

Beauty of the Church.

Not expansive domes nor gorgeous windows nor graceful arches constitute the beauty of a church, but God and only God. No temple is beautiful which does not express the loveliness of his face.—Rev. Dr. James Oliver Wilson, Methodist, New York.

Humanity and the Church.

Our church must be humanitarian. So long as money is hoarded or piled up in costly buildings called churches while hunger stalks about the streets will there be a chasm between the church and the masses.—Rev. Dr. Broughton, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Paying a Reckless Price.

Men and women are too ready to pay a thoughtless, a reckless, price for the goods they covet. Fame is worth something, and so is reputation, if it is honestly earned, but if you compromise your honor you are practically selling your soul.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

The Strength of His People.

Jesus Christ has been sneered at as a woman's God. Well, why not? The God of our mothers, the God of our sisters, the God of our wives—what derogation is there in that? But he was a man's God as well. He was the strength of his people.—Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

The Strongest Argument.

When Jesus asked his accusers, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" he put forth the highest argument possible. A man who shows manhood has a tendency to bring men to him, just as a man who does wrong will contaminate those who associate with him.—Rev. Cassius M. Roberts, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Obligation to the Home.

While it is true that most persons do not go to church often enough, there are many who go to church too often. No man or woman has a right to take a class in the Sunday school when a Sunday school class is being neglected at home. Any social or philanthropic organization which makes one want to get away from home life or home duties is a detriment, no matter what else it may be doing.—Rev. Charles Stelzle, Methodist, St. Louis.

The Definition of Gambling.

All betting, all staking of valuables, in the outcome of games of chance or skill, all playing, for example, of cards or prizes, is gambling; all buying of chances in a drawing, whether of lottery, policy or raffle by mail, in an office, shop or church building is gambling; all speculating in margins and all investments in securities, based upon prospects only and promising immense returns when oil is struck or gold is found, is gambling.—Rev. Robert Westly Peach, Presbyterian, Camden, N. J.

Many Denver business men are rejoicing in the fact that the Anti-Saloon league (by the testimony of the saloon men themselves) is responsible for a decrease in the sale of liquors of over 12,000 each week.—Denver News.

The Superintendent of the Home for the Feeble Minded, at Fort Wayne, Ind., who has studied the subject of imbecility for many years, says that seventy-five per cent. of such cases are due to drink on the part of the parents.—Union Gospel News.

The Union Central LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

Religious News.

The protracted meeting at Warwick church closed on Sunday, September 28th, with thirty-two additions to the church. Rev. Mr. Davis, the pastor, was assisted by Rev. J. T. Riddick, of Norfolk.—Suffolk Herald.

Protracted meetings were held last week at Rocky Run, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Sturgis, assisted by Rev. Bascom Dey, of the Lunenburg circuit, and Rev. Mr. Owen, of the Disciples' Church.—Courier.

Protracted meetings will begin at Wheaton Methodist church on next Sunday—services morning and night that day, and to continue nightly throughout the week.

Pastor James will begin revival services next Sunday afternoon at Asbury Methodist church, on the Island, to continue through the week at night. Rev. J. W. S. Robins will assist.—Citizen.

It is rumored in Methodist Church circles here that Rev. T. J. Wray, the pastor in charge, may not return to the Heathsville Circuit after the meeting of the Annual Conference in November. All the churches of the circuit are pleased with Mr. Wray, and it is thought that he is pleased with Heathsville and the people, but if he makes a change it will be because of his health. Mr. Wray is a successful pastor and a good preacher.

The protracted meeting which has been in progress for ten days at Memorial church here came to a close last night, when nine converts united themselves with the church. Rev. Henry W. Dunkley did the preaching—the pastor of the church. His reputation as a revivalist was fully sustained. His manner is so tender, his sermons so powerfully convincing and his delivery and illustrations so forceful his auditors are at once charmed with his preaching. Great good has been accomplished on the circuit this year, and Mr. Dunkley will go down to the Annual Conference, which meets in Richmond next month, with probably the best report the circuit has ever made. He is indeed a man of God.—Appomattox Times.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Nottoway Circuit gave an entertainment at Rocky Hill church on last Saturday, the 4th, the object of which was to raise money to help build a school in China, to be known as the Virginia School. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather quite a good crowd assembled to listen to a very interesting address by Mrs. Richard Bagby, of Petersburg, the vice-president of the Virginia Conference Society.

Mrs. Bagby first gave a brief statement of missionary work in general, and then of "Woman's work for woman from its beginning; how the women in Christian lands, stirred by the needs of their heathen sisters whom men could not reach, began to band themselves together to send them the Gospel, the only lever which could raise woman from her degradation."

Mrs. Bagby closed with an appeal to all to help in this noble work. After this address, lunch and refreshments were served.—Blackstone Courier.

EVANGELIST BRANSFORD AT TRINITY.

The special services conducted by Mr. Bransford are increasing daily in numbers and in interest. He preaches from manuscript, but with great freedom and directness. Fearless in denouncing the sins and shortcomings of mere nominal church members, he maintains a high standard of Christian living. He rivets attention. If the evening congregations continue to increase, it will soon be difficult to see the people. Services daily at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. Next Sunday evening he will preach a sermon on the Christian Home.—Salisbury, Md., News.

OPENING OF NEW COURT-STREET CHURCH.

Lynchburg, Va., October 11th.—The date set for the dedicatory exercises of the new Court-Street Methodist church, corner of Seventh and Court streets, is Sunday, November 23d, immediately after the annual meeting of the Virginia Conference, and at the beginning of the Conference year. This time has been chosen in order that some of the former pastors of the church may be present and take part in the exercises, among them being Dr. L. B. Betty, pastor of Clay-Street church, Richmond; Dr. William J. Edwards, professor in Randolph-Macon College; Dr. W. E. Judkins, presiding elder Norfolk district.

Dr. W. J. Young, the present pastor, has charge of the programme, but has not yet completed it. It will include some kind of special exercises in the Sunday school department at the usual hours for Sunday school, to be followed by preaching and the regular dedicatory exercises. A communion service will be held in the afternoon at 4 o'clock, and at night Rev. George I. Stuart, the evangelist, will begin a series of services to last two weeks. During the day special service will be rendered by an augmented choir, under the direction of Professor W. S. Adams.

BISHOP GRANBERY TO PREACH.

The original plan was to have Bishop Coke Smith to preach in the morning and Bishop John Cowper Granbery of Ashland, to fill the pulpit at night, but it was found that Bishop Smith's engagements would prevent him from coming to Lynchburg until the end of January, so it was arranged that Bishop Granbery should deliver the dedicatory sermon in the morning. Bishop Granbery is the only living preacher who took part in the dedication of the old church, fifty-one years ago last June. He was at that time pastor of Centenary Methodist church, and on dedication day preached the night in the Court-Street church. Later on he was war chaplain of the Eleventh Virginia Infantry, in which were many citizens of Lynchburg.

The new church is one of the handsomest in the South, and, including site, is valued at about $90,000. It occupies the site of the former church.

of Kentucky greystone, and has a seating capacity of about 1,600.

SPLENDIDLY FITTED UP.

With the exception of the basement under the Sunday school room, which is being fitted up to be used as a reception room for sociables, with kitchen annexed, the building is completed. The interior of the auditorium the carpets, the pews, and the heating and lighting arrangements are all in place, and all that is now needed is the completion of the $8,000 organ from Boston. The workmen to set this up have been here for several days; the first load of organ material has arrived, the second car is looked for to-day, and others will quickly follow, so that it is expected to be ready for use in a month or less, in plenty of time for dedication.

All the handsome stained glass windows in the church were placed there by Mr. and Mrs. George M. Jones as a memorial to their two daughters, and it is hoped that within the next two or three years some other equally liberal spirited member of the church will contribute a set of chimes. The tower has been specially constructed for this purpose, and it is believed that a set of bells to be operated by electrical power could be easily obtained for about $3,500.—Dispatch.

SESSION OF HOLSTON CONFERENCE.

Wytheville, Va., October 13th.—Holston Conference closed its session to-night. Three business sessions were held to-day. The work of the twentieth century movement was discussed, and was decided to carry it on.

It was reported that there had been between six and seven thousand conversions during the Conference year.

Strong opposition developed to the return of the credentials of W. A. Thomas, who surrendered them several years ago, and who asked their return in order to unite with the Western North Carolina Conference. The opposition was successful, and the return of the papers was refused.

Governor Montague was introduced to the Conference and made a few most appropriate remarks on Christian citizenship, which were happily responded to by Bishop Morrison. The Governor received a warm reception.

A large part of the day was given to Emory and Henry College, and several addresses were delivered by professors and students.

It was reported that the Conference now has 56,358 members of churches.

It was decided to hold the next session of the Conference in Morristown, Tenn. Cleveland, Tenn., was also nominated, the vote being 67 to 55. The Bishop made appropriate remarks, and Conference adjourned after the reading of the appointments.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

President W. R. Proctor presided at the Methodist ministers' meeting yesterday at Epworth church, and Rev. G. H. Lambeth acted as temporary secretary. Rev. Dr. J. H. Moss led in prayer.

Most of the pulpits were filled by the ministers of the Christian Convention, now in session in this city.

Rev. J. B. Merritt, of the Seamen's Bethel, reported large congregations and fine services.

Rev. D. T. Merritt has been in a week's protracted meeting at Newsums, Va., in which there were eight professions. He reported pleasant and profitable services Sunday in Port Norfolk. Rev. W. D. Mills, of Iowa, preached in the morning and Rev. L. A. Dykeman, of Pennsylvania, at night. A protracted meeting begins this week at the Port Norfolk church. Electric lights have recently been put in the building.

Rev. Ernest Stevens reported two very good sermons at Owens Memorial, by Revs. W. H. Chidley, of Canada, and N. M. Haikes, of Maine.

Rev. J. N. Latham reported very good Sunday school, for the weather. Dr. W. F. Foster addressed the Rosebuds in the afternoon.

Rev. M. W. Baker, Ph. D., of Springfield, O., preached a thoughtful and scholarly sermon at Park View.

Rev. D. J. Traynham had the usual services at Deep Creek, Indiana, and Olive Branch. The outlook is good to pay all claims in full this Conference year.

Rev. M. T. Morrill preached at Epworth in the morning to a large congregation, and the foreign missionary collection was taken. Rev. Dr. McWhinnie, chancellor of Palmer university, preached at night to a crowded house, chairs being brought in to accommodate the audience.

Rev. R. H. Bennett spoke in the afternoon at the Portsmouth Y. M. C. A. Huntersville church, Rev. E. K. Odell, pastor, had a large attendance. Rev. O. F. Furnass, of Ohio, preached. A male chorus from Cumberland Street Sunday school rendered good music.

Rev. Albert Godbey, of Muncie, Ind., preached morning and night at Oaklette, and Rev. N. R. Smith, pastor, preached at Bethel in the afternoon. A protracted meeting goes on this week at Bethel.

Rev. Horace Mann, of Ohio, preached at Centenary to a fair congregation. At night Rev. Mr. Brown, of Indiana, preached to the largest night congregation in months. Half of the debt of long standing on Centenary church was paid last week. Rev. E. T. Dammun reported that the balance will be paid by Conference, in November.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings reported two good congregations at Monumental, and two good sermons by Rev. Dr. A. L. Aldridge, of Indiana, and Rev. Dr. J. L. Everingham, of Ontario, Canada.

Dr. James H. Moss had usual services and a fine night congregation at Smithfield.

Rev. C. W. Cain heard Drs. Bishop and Powers, of the Christian Church.

Rev. W. H. Eder, of Georgia, preached at Wright Memorial in the morning. Rev. Dr. Kerr, of Dayton, O., addressed the afternoon missionary meeting, and Rev. G. H. McFaden preached at night to a large congregation.

Rev. John P. Woodward taught his Sunday school class at Epworth and attended the church services there as usual.

Large congregations at LeKies Memorial heard Rev. Drs. A. S. Youmans, of Albany, N. Y., and A. E. Nelson, of St. Louis.

Dr. S. S. Lambeth and Rev. W. C. Vaden preached at South Norfolk.

Rev. Charles H. McGhee conducted the funeral at Lambert's Point at 8 A. M. of a fine Christian woman, Mrs. Henrietta Crostic. His pulpit was filled at 11 A. M. by Rev. W. J. Young, of Conneaut, O. Rev. Mr. Hawks, of Michigan, made a talk after the sermon. Dr. Powers, president of the Christian Conference, closed the service. At night Dr. A. L. Aldridge, president of Union Christian College, Merom, O., preached at night. Large congregations enjoyed both sermons.

Rev. S. Q. Helfinstein, of New York, preached at McKendree at 11 A. M., and Rev. W. M. Bothwick, D. D., at night. Mrs. Wells, national secretary, addressed a W. C. T. U. meeting in the afternoon.

Rev. Drs. A. H. Morrill, of New York, and W. P. Fletcher, of Toronto, Canada, preached for Rev. C. L. Bane, at Cumberland Street.

Rally Day programme was admirably carried out at Memorial, Berkley. Rev. W. C. Vaden and Rev. Dr. Burnett filled the pulpit.

On motion, Revs. R. H. Bennett, J. N. Latham and Dr. S. S. Lambeth were appointed a committee to wait on the street railway employers and request that they so arrange their schedules as to allow their employees the opportunity to attend church services and to enjoy Sabbath rest.—virginian-Pilot.

A revival has been arranged for Trinity Methodist church, beginning Wednesday, October 22d, at night, at which the preaching will be done by the Rev. Dr. Henry Clay Morrison, of Louisville, Ky. Dr. Morrison is considered one of the best orators in the Methodist denomination, and while he is devoting himself to revival work, he is not given to sensationalism in any form. He is a preacher who believes that souls can be won for the Master by a presentation of the beauties of the Gospel in a loving, refined and simple manner. He opposes all that is not refined and wholesome in the pulpit, his language being clear, entertaining and noted for its elegance. As an orator he enjoys quite a reputation. The services will be conducted nightly and will be augmented by a large choir under the direction of Prof. Mitchell.

Dr. Morrison will be here for a week or ten days, and will likely hold two services each day.—Dispatch.

Large congregations were present at Laurel Street Methodist church at both services yesterday, the occasion being "Missionary Day." The Rev. Dr. Henry E. Johnson, the pastor, delivered a stirring address on the missionary work, in which he urged the congrega-

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago

Chicago.

By a vivid, startling parallel Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage portrays the evil of sin and its remedy. His text is II Kings, v, 1,
"But he was a leper."

The best blood in all Europe flows into the army. The keenest of brains are covered by the soldier's cap. The peasantry are overtaxed and brow-beaten and flung under the iron heel of oppression in order that the gift faced officer, who is the scion of an aristocratic family, may have a soft couch upon which to sleep and a clean limbed thoroughbred upon which to cavort while he salutes the reviewing officer during dress parade. Every civilian is at the beck and call of the military—from the innkeeper's daughter, flirting with the sergeant or the young corporal, up to the princess smiling at the favorite staff officer of her father, the king. The German shopkeeper will turn his back upon you in an instant if the clank of the sword is heard and the glitter of the shoulder strap is seen in the doorway.
On account of this foolish adoration by a cringing populace the foreign officer or private soldier has grown arrogant and conceited and snobbish and supercilious and petulant and spoiled.

The Syrian nation was a military nation, with all that the word implies, and Captain Naaman was the commander in chief of all its armies, the headquarters of which were to be found in the Damascus capital. But Naaman wielded a higher influence than that which belongs even to the greatest soldier of a military kingdom.
The phrase used by the inspired historian, "a great man with his master, and honorable," implies that he held a position more powerful in the kingdom than the head of the privy council, the prime minister or the secretary of state or secretary of the treasury, and he may have held, through the prestige of his military successes, some or all of these offices in his own person, as great pashas often do in oriental lands.
He occupied practically the same position in the Damascus capital that the Duke of Wellington occupied after the battle of Waterloo. The Duke of Wellington, by the overthrow of the Napoleonic dynasty, not only became the prime minister of England, but for awhile the most influential statesman in all Europe. Naaman had in Damascus an influence similar to that of Julius Caesar when he returned to Rome from his foreign victories or which Napoleon held in the French nation when he was first consul as well as the commander of the French legions. Naam-an was as mighty in influence as was the French cardinal who used to overawe his king in the council chamber, when he would stamp up and down the room, crying: "It shall be done! I say it shall be done! I am Richelieu who says it, and it shall be done." And when the great French statesman would thus speak the frightened king dared not answer a word.

The Symbol of Sin.

But after I have shown you Naaman's fame and power in the Syrian nation;
after I have figuratively piled stone upon stone and height upon height and mountain upon mountain in setting forth this pyramid of human greatness, the whole structure tumbles into ruins when I speak the words of my text. I bring the mightiest human influence of the east down to the lowest depths of earthly misery. I bring Naaman down from his high pedestal until even the poor beggar in the street might have cause to pity him. I bring him down until not one physically well man in all the world, no matter how low he might be in the social scale, would exchange places with him. Naaman was a prince. Naaman was a mighty military potentate, a statesman, a ruler.

He was practically greater than a king,
"but he was a leper."

The disease of leprosy has often been Biblically used as the symbol of sin.

It is a most impressing and appalling symbol. We in America cannot realize all that is implied by comparing any man's spiritual condition to this horrible disease. In the far east I have seen with loathing some of the awful ravages of this disease. I would describe in symbol some of the horrors of sin by telling what my own eyes have seen and what my own ears have heard among those poor creatures physically doomed.

Leprosy, humanly speaking, is an incurable disease. Scientists ever since history began have been studying the onward march of this fatal destroyer.
Although most prevalent in the east
it is confined to no climate and is peculiar to no age, race or condition.
Nearly 2,000 years before Christ was born in Bethlehem we read that Miriam, who led the Hebrew maidens in the triumphant dance when Pharaoh's host was submerged in the Red sea, was afflicted with leprosy because she became sinfully jealous. Miriam was jealous because her brother Moses, eighty years of age, fell in love and wanted to take a wife. Clear back in 1516 Holbein, the artist, painted a picture of Elizabeth distributing bread to the unclean lepers of Augsburg. Lepers among the icebergs of the north, lepers basking in the torrid heats about the equator lepers in Europe, lepers in Asia, lepers in Africa, lepers in America, lepers in the islands of the seas!
But, though leprosy has been found by the scientists everywhere, yet one fact is universally recognized about the disease—it is incurable. A man who has the leprosy poison in his system has no hope from medicine. He must grow worse and worse until he comes to the grave. It is as incurable as that disease which we call cancer and which is only a little less fatal in its hideous and repulsive results than lep-rosy. When General Grant was suffering from an affection of the throat, the family physicians feared a cancer. But, to be upon the safe side in their diagnosis, they took to a specialist a small part of the excrescence from the throat. "Now," the doctors said to that specialist, "this excres-cence is from a man of very great national influence. We will not tell you his name, as it might bias your judgment." The specialist placed the excrescence under the microscope. After carefully examining it he said: "It is a fatal cancer. Who's throat did it come from?" "General U. S. Grant's," was the answer. "Then," said the great bacteriologist, "General Grant is doomed. He must die."

The Soul's Affliction.

How terrible are these diseases that physicians confess themselves unable to cure! How startling, then, is the divine statement that the soul may be afflicted with such a disease similarly beyond human medicament. Sin is a leprosy. Sin is the cancer of the soul gnawing at its vitals. Sin is the forerunner of eternal death. There are men today within the sound of my voice who in their own strength have been fighting sin for the last twenty or thirty years. But as you grow weaker the power of your sin is growing stronger. God have pity upon you, for you are a doomed leper. You are doomed by leprosy sin.

But though from our standpoint lep-rosy is incurable, yet the leprosy scales were cleansed by a divine power.
Therefore it is to Christ and to Christ alone that we must look for the cure of sin. The moral leper may go with confidence to Christ, who cured the physical lepers by a word. When the ten lepers came to the Saviour pleading for help, Christ turned and said:
"Go show yourselves unto the priests.
And it came to pass as they went they were cleansed." Naaman, the great captain, was helpless in the hands of his human physicians. On account of his wealth and fame Naaman—like General Grant, afflicted with cancer—must have had the best doctors the royal court of Damascus could summon; but when Naaman, obedient to the divine command through Elisha, went and dipped seven times in the river Jordan his flesh became like the flesh of a little child. O my brother and sister, you who are cursed with leprosy sin, will you not come to the divine fountain? Will you not bathe in Christ's blood? Will you not today by the Calvary cross seek supernatural medicament?

Leprosy may take a very long time in which to fatally develop, although such is not always the way the disease progresses. Sometimes the scourge in a few months may change a beautiful body into a hideous corpse, but the quick result is the exception and not the rule. At this first touch of lep-rosy usually there may only be a hardness, or rather a numbness, of the skin in a spot about the size of a ten cent piece. The skin at that one place merely turns as white as snow. If you know nothing about the disease, you may not worry about it. You may, for a long time, be indifferent to the numbness. Then, some day when you are in a physician's office seeking advice for some other cause, you may turn to the doctor and say: "By the way, doctor, I have a very peculiar something the matter with my hand.
It does not hurt me, but it is numb in one place." Then the physician with a grave face will look at your hand.
Then he will take a pin out of the lapel of his coat and prick that spot.
Then he will turn and say: "You are a leper! You are already doomed, although death may be many years away."

The Fatal White Mark.

When going through one of the leper hospitals of Calcutta, I saw standing in one of the wards a beautiful flaxen haired baby boy. He was only about six or seven years of age. He was one of the healthiest looking and prettiest children I ever saw. He was the son of an English soldier. He was such a lovely boy, and while his great big eyes were looking at me he was standing there with his thumb in his mouth sucking it as some of us perhaps have sucked our thumbs when we were children. I turned and said to the lovely boy, "Why are you here?"
"Got the disease," he answered.
"Where?" said I as the great tears began to rain down my cheeks. The lad raised one of his pretty bare legs.
Then, pointing to the ball of his foot, he said, "There it is." As I looked I could hardly keep back my sobs. I saw in the ball of his foot the fatal white mark. It was like a beautiful snowflake. The child was doomed.
He was a leper!

But, though leprosy may come in a seemingly harmless way, the disease for four, five, ten, even fifteen will keep on steadily spreading. It spread until the fingers fall off from hands and the toes from the feet. It keep on spreading until the skin band cracks and the hair falls out.

leprosy sin, coming in a seemi-harmless way, will keep on spread-until it makes the face hideous, body deformed. It may keep on spring for years until at last the leprosy sin will destroy the body well as the soul.

It is related that a young English artist, desiring to paint the figure of "Innocence," used as a model the of a lovely little child. The eyes lips and the smile of his model the most beautiful he ever saw. All land came to admire the picture. M-years afterward, when the artist attained to great fame, he decided paint a companion picture to the one had painted in his youth. He was to call the companion picture "Depravity." He wandered up and down London slums until at last he found hideous looking mortal, a man who seemed to be a monster without a so-After the artist had used this hide-model and finished his companion ture he found, to his astonishmethat the two models were the same

The model of "Depravity" was once beautiful child, who had beco-depraved by the fatal disease of leprosy sin, which had wrought the horrible transformation in face and ure, in body and soul. So, my bro-er, though this disease of leprosy may take many years to develop,
it will surely permeate the mind soul until both perish in horrible bathos corruption.

Leprosy is an infectious disease.
is infectious as the scarlet fever ger-is infectious. It is spread throughout community only by the leprosy ger-of one physical body being brought to contact with another physical bo-when the latter is in a condition favorable for the development of that lerous germ. Thus in the leprosy hos-established in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1865, it was found by inves-gation that every one of the nine patients confined within that lepro-hospital had contracted the disease leprosy within a radius of seven miles from the point where the first case of Canadian leprosy was discoered. Convinced of its infectious chaacter, Dr. Emerson, who was for man-years in the employ of the Hawaiian government, gave as his testimony that it is utterly useless to fight the leprodisease in any other way than by isolation.

The Terrors of Leprosy.

To isolate the lepers of the Hawaia-Islands, Molokai, the leper reservatiofor the islands of the Pacific, was established. In the Holy Land the Jew-and gentiles alike drive their own leprous kith and kin from their sides into isolation. They exclude them from the cities and the towns. As you travel through the east those lepers, some with their arms and teeth gone, some on crutches, some sightless, some with cracked and bleeding lips, come down the mountain side and in hoarse, piping voices beg for food and money. It seems to be a very heartless method thus to isolate the lepers, but the orientals say, "Better that a few men and women starve and die, better that a few infectious lepers be exiled from civilization, than that a whole community sicken and be destroyed."

The poet has well described the isolation of the infectious lepers in the east lest the rest of the community might be stricken:

"Room for the leper, room," and as he

TESTIMONY OF A COMMON-WEALTH'S ATTORNEY.

Commonwealth's Attorney W. W. G. Mason, in his address at our Wise County A. S. L. Convention, made this statement: "I have been Commonwealth's attorney three years. In that time I have prosecuted about 200 cases of felony, nine-tenths of which were caused directly or indirectly by drink. The man who was recently hung was intoxicated when he killed his fellow-man. The man who will shortly be executed is a drinking man, and has been made a bad man by liquor." Virginians, heed the above, out of 200 cases 180 caused, directly or indirectly, drink. Think of the criminal expense, the broken hearts and the wrecked lives caused by the traffic in rum. Think of it—two men hung in the county within two months, and drink responsible.—J. W. W.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WILLIAM E. ROSS.

A letter from Mr. D. M. Cloninger, Stanley, N. C., dated July 5, 1900, asking for catalogue of our school, contains this statement:

"I am personally acquainted with some of your former students, all of whom are now holding lucrative positions, and they attribute their success to the thorough training obtained at your college, and speak in most glowing terms of you and your college."

We Teach—

tion to do all in their power to further the work of the missionaries of the Church in both home and foreign fields.

"We cannot all work in the different fields as missionaries," said the doctor, "but we can help forward the work by our prayers and means."

The sermons were listened to with the closest attention and made a deep impression.

FROM PETERSBURG.

Rev. J. A. Thomas, pastor of Wesley Methodist church, is delivering a series of interesting Sunday night sermons to women.

Some of the interesting topics of pulpit discussion in this city on Sunday were the following:

By Rev. Dr. Battle, of the First Baptist church: "Christ and Social Disorders," in the course of which the great coal strike and other troubles of the sort were referred to.

By Rev. H. W. Pratt, of the Old-Street Presbyterian church: "Is the Presbyterian Church Adapted to the Masses?"

By Rev. George E. Booker, of the High Street Methodist church, "A Woman's Happiness."

By Rev. E. P. Parham, of Blandford Methodist church: "A Strong Partnership."

By Rev. Dr. W. G. Starr, of Washington Street church: "What is God's Opinion of His Own Word?"

By Rev. S. C. Hatcher, of Market Street church: "Three Queenly Traits of a Woman's Character."—Dispatch.

PORTSMOUTH METHODISTS.

Among the Methodists of Portsmouth increasing interest is felt in the session of the Virginia Conference of that denomination as the date for its assembly in the city of Richmond approaches. Scarcely four weeks remain before the body will be called to order by Bishop Duncan in Broad Street church, Richmond. But eleven months have passed since the Conference met in its last annual session at Newport News.

That occasion is remembered most pleasantly by those who were in attendance upon the sessions of the body in that city. As a result of the Newport News Conference Portsmouth was deprived, by mandate of the Bishop and his advisers, of two of her most popular pastors. The Rev. George E. Booker, the brilliant pastor and earnest Christian worker, who went from Wright Memorial to Petersburg. The Rev. Mr. Booker's labors during the period of his ministry here will ever live as a benediction upon the congregation committed to his charge and the community at large, in the opinion of many who knew of his earnest endeavors here.

The other pastor who was transferred to another charge at the last Conference was the Rev. Dr. J. C. C. Newton, who was assigned to Salisbury, Md. Dr. Newton, by his winning disposition and scholarly attainments, won many friends during his ministry here. He is very kindly remembered not only by his former parishioners, but also by the community at large, in whose progress and prosperity he took the most active interest.

One change will of necessity have to be made. Under the law of limitation of the Church, the Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder of this district, must be transferred to another field of labor. He has served here for four years, the full term allowed any preacher in any one field.

The removal of the Rev. Mr. Vaden from his present charge is a source of deep regret to his many friends here and throughout the entire district. He has administered the affairs of his office fairly and impartially. By his unfailing courtesy and zeal he has won the confidence and esteem of those whose privilege it has been to be associated with him in his work.

Several rumors are afloat as to Mr. Vaden's successor, but the identity of the next presiding elder of the district will not be known until later, but it is hoped that the Bishop will make as wise a selection as when Mr. Vaden was assigned to the Portsmouth District four years ago.—Portsmouth Star.

CONGRATULATING BISHOP SMITH

An engrossed copy of the following resolutions, adopted by the official board of Epworth M. E. church, have been sent Bishop A. Coke Smith:

Whereas our well-beloved pastor, A. Coke Smith, D. D., has been elected to the College of Bishops of the M. E. Church, South; and

Whereas this board has not yet given official expression of its deep regret and sorrow at the great loss we have sustained by the separation; and

Whereas we believe that official action is right and proper, that a record may be made in our minutes expressive of the high esteem in which we hold our brother and our regret at the separation; expressing to him also our congratulations upon his having received this well deserved recognition of his worth, ability and Christian character, and at the same time tendering our congratulations to the Church at large in having added to the College of Bishops one who will reflect credit upon it, and who will doubtless, through his ability as a preacher and his splendid Christian character, be instrumental in accomplishing great good for Methodism; therefore, be it

Resolved, first, That we deeply deplore the loss of our dearly beloved pastor, whose separation from us is made necessary by reason of his elevation to the office of Bishop.

Resolved, second, That while we have sustained a great loss, we congratulate the Church and Methodism in the exaltation of Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., to the office of Bishop.

Resolved, third, That we extend to Bishop A. Coke Smith our sincere congratulations, and express the great satisfaction that his election to the College of Bishops gives us.

Resolved, fourth, That it having come to our knowledge that our brother, Bishop Smith, contemplates making his home for the present in Charlotte, N. C., we desire to express our deep regret that this move is necessary, and earnestly express the hope that his absence may be only temporary, and that in the near future the Methodists of Norfolk and vicinity may, with his consent, have the pleasure of locating him pleasantly and permanently in our city.

Resolved, fifth, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the record book, and a copy, certified by the secretary, be sent to Bishop A. Coke Smith.

THE SALOON EVIL.

In a sermon delivered yesterday at the Broad Street Methodist church the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp discussed the saloon evil, and made frequent reference and application to the local aspect of the situation. He commended the Crenshaw high license proposition, and made several other unusually interesting statements touching upon the whiskey traffic as represented in Richmond.

Incidentally Mr. Beauchamp said that in a recent conversation with a prominent city official he had been told that the city wouldn't abolish the saloon license; it could not afford to lose the revenue from this source. Since that time Mr. Beauchamp has learned that the saloons of Richmond, numbering three hundred or more, pay into the coffers of the city treasurer something like $16,000, and yesterday from the pulpit he declared that the Christian people of Richmond would raise this amount of money each year and give it to the city if the saloons would be abolished. "And we will not ask for any consideration in the city government," added Mr. Beauchamp, significantly.

The subject of Mr. Beauchamp was "The Church and the Saloon," and was taken from the text, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." He opened with a statement from one of the last sermons of the late T. De Witt Talmage that it seems to him that the Church must either eliminate the saloon or it will be itself eliminated.

Mr. Beauchamp took the ground that there is no good work the Church undertakes, which it is not the tendency of the saloon to undo. In the first place, the Church seeks to save the individual and to give to him a pure heart, a clear mind and a strong body; the saloon, on the other hand, degrades the individual, wrecks his mind and his body, and damns his soul. The purpose of the Church is to make happy and prosperous homes; the effect of the saloon is to curse and impoverish the home. The Church purifies society and makes it righteous; the saloon degrades society and tends to wickedness. The Church seeks to establish heaven in the earth and give heaven to men when they leave the earth; the saloon introduces disorder and hell in the earth and tends to send men to hell after death. The Church of God seeks to go out into the world among heathens and the cannibal alike to bring to them the higher ideals of Christianity; the saloon, as indicated in the case of the Philippine Islands, follows in its trail and seeks to degrade the self-same people that the Church attempts to save. The ideal of the Church and its products is Jesus Christ; the ideal of the saloon and its product is Czolgoscz, slayer of McKinley.

In conclusion Mr. Beauchamp declared no one can have to do with the saloon and keep the second great Commandment of Christ: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The business of every man and woman who professes to love God and his fellow-men is to seek by every legitimate means to eliminate the saloon from society. He believed that the saloon evil would never be settled until the saloon is eliminated, yet he gave his cordial support to any movement or method to help cripple the power of the saloon. In this connection he trusted that the good people of Richmond would stand behind Mr. Crenshaw in his fight for a high license.—Leader.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, October 8, 1902.

Washington this week is gay with color in honor of the thirty-sixth encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, and thousands of veterans, their wives and families, throng the beautiful streets of the Capital. As became this great reunion of patriots, the opening exercises were of a religious character. Notwithstanding the fact a heavy rain was falling on Sunday afternoon, a great number of veterans gathered in the Grant tent, Camp Roosevelt, where the Engineer's Band played sacred music, and several prominent clergymen conducted an appropriate service.

Rev. Mr. Alexander made the opening prayer, which was followed by the singing of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," to the painissimo accompaniment of the band. A Scripture reading followed, and then Rev. Dr. Schick, the President's pastor, offered a prayer, which was followed in turn by an address by Rev. D. B. Shuey, of Emporia, Kan., who served throughout the war as chaplain. In the course of his remarks, Dr. Shuey stated that the men of his regiment had led religious lives throughout the war, and that the same was true to-day of the members of G. A. R. posts in Kansas. He asserted that the statement that prohibition in Kansas was a failure was untrue, and was merely made by enemies, who desired to discredit the prohibition movement.

In the evening another large meeting was held in Grant tent, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Veterans of two wars were there, and the brilliant electric lights shone on heads whitened with the snows of many winters, and on beardless youth who had fought in Cuba and the far-off Philippines. One of the most enjoyable features of the evening was the song service rendered by the Polk Miller Plantation Quartette. The address of the evening was made by Dr. W. W. White, of New York, who took for his text the question, "Is it folly to pray?" He likened the prayers which availed nothing to the 6,000,000 letters which go astray every year—they are not properly addressed. He said that were it not for prayer, men would forget their and gradually come to regard all things as happening automatically. Concluding, he said: "Prayer is a means. If the means is not used, the end will not be produced. The philosophy of prayer is that prayer is a means to an end, just as sowing is to reaping. Salvation is having a relationship established between ourselves and God."

"Hitch your wagon to a star," is the motto of the Y. M. C. A. this year. During the approaching winter the Association will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary, and its aim is to increase its membership in the District of Columbia to 2,200, that being the full capacity of its present building. At the present time there are 1,850 members on the rolls. With that end in view, an enthusiastic meeting was held last Sunday evening and one hundred of the most popular young men in the organization promised to enter a contest similar to that held a year ago, two sides being chosen and each striving to secure the largest number of new members. The two sides are known as the "minstrels" and the "acrobats," and the losers will be called upon to provide their antagonists with an evening's entertainment of the character their name indicates.

Although there were thousands of visitors in Washington last Sunday, the same rigid observance of the Christian Sunday prevailed which is usual in the Capital of the nation. Every room was shut up and barber shops and all other places of business which had attempted to secure permits to remain open during the G. A. R. encampment were tightly closed. The moral element in Washington determined that the Capital should set no bad example to the rest of the country during the present week, and they are already congratulating themselves on the success which has met their efforts in that direction.

The scarcity of hard coal and the almost prohibitory price of soft coal and other fuel is the occasion of serious anxiety to the charitable institutions of the city. There are a large number of people in Washington who require assistance every winter, and one of their most pressing needs is fuel. It has been the custom for the Associated Charities and similar organizations to distribute a considerable amount of fuel heretofore, but at present prices that appears to be impossible. At the same time, the need gives promise of being greater than ever. Women who have heretofore supported themselves and their families by taking in washing have been compelled to give up that work for the reason that they could not obtain prices which would leave them any margin after paying for the necessary fuel. The Associated Charities have called a special meeting for October 13th, to consider what steps to take in the embarrassing situation.

A visitor in Washington, who has just returned from Great Britain, tells our correspondent that both England and Scotland are awakening to the necessity of temperance education in the schools and elsewhere. He says that the statement that the consumption of alcoholic liquors in the United States is but half that in Great Britain is being widely circulated, and the excellent work in the cause of temperance accomplished by the W. C. T. U. and other total abstinence organizations is attracting attention, and is likely to be extensively emulated. A crusade against the serving of liquor in the army and navy has already been inaugurated, and its promoters hope for success at no distant date. Throughout the agitation the United States has been held up in a most enviable and edifying light.

MY BIBLE CLASS.

For months past we have been following in our Sunday schools the wanderings of the chosen people. We have blamed and pitied, and sometimes we have scorned the cowardliness and unbelief of Israel's great multitude, while for some others we have felt a sincere admiration and even friendship. Who is it that has not learned to love Joshua and Caleb! Indeed, so great has been the interest in these two worthies that in my Bible class there has a partisan spirit developed, as some say "Caleb was the first speaker; he stilled the people; he wholly followed the Lord; while the hearts of the people were caused to melt by the discouraging report of the ten cowardly spies, Caleb's voice arose in strong and stirring rebuke of their unfaithfulness and their evil report of the good land." Others say, "Joshua was Moses' minister during his life. After his death he was his God-appointed successor to lead the people, and received from God the promise, 'As I was with Moses, so will I be with thee.'"

Such discussions may be profitable. The words of the holy men of God cannot be too often or too closely studied; while our Jewish brethren are speaking and writing with enthusiasm of their great worthies, of their history and literature, the followers of Christ love and study with delight the same subjects because we find in them Jesus of Nazareth, our Saviour and Redeemer. From Him we have received the new nature; are no longer carnally minded, but love the things of the Spirit; have had our hearts turned to the things of the Spirit, and love His testimonies, saying with delight: "Oh how I love thy law! It is my meditation all the day. H. T. B. Clarksville, Va.

The collapse of Chas. M. Schwab, head of the United States Steel Company, brings many good lessons to those who have watched his brilliant career. It is said that he has broken down with overwork, but it may be doubted whether hard work alone is altogether to blame for his present condition. There are probably hundreds of thousands of men in the world who work quite as hard as he. The fact is, however, that he is almost entirely absorbed with work and has not the mental resources within himself to secure rest and change which are so necessary to give tired nerves and muscles requisite resiliency for the next day's strain. It will be recalled that Mr. Schwab, when he was first brought into prominent notice on account of his being elevated to a high position, gave as his opinion that a college education was not essential to a successful career such as he had achieved. We would not dispute his claim, but it is very apparent that a good education would have at least prepared him for the arduous duties of life which he is now compelled to confront. Lacking all mental resource he has been compelled for the last two years to resort to other means of entertainment, which are not praiseworthy. His passion for gambling and for extravagant sport affords a poor example to other youth. It is said by those who know him that in his personal manners he is vulgar and boorish. He is self-conceited and familiar. If he plays golf he is not satisfied unless he bets a large purse on every play of the game. If he sees a horse race or ball game he is not content unless he bets money on the outcome. In other words, the only means he has of entertaining himself is by the extravagant use of money and by using it in ways that are very objectionable to the moral sense. His career has been so often exposed for the admiration of young men that it is merely right that the partial wreck of that career should be also exposed and the reasons which have caused it explained.—Ram's Horn.

AN EVIL WITHOUT EXCUSE.

Viewed from any standpoint, there is no reasonable excuse for the existence of the saloon anywhere or under any circumstances. It has never brought an iota of permanent good to any man, woman, or child, heathen or Christian, white or colored. It has brought more woes upon the earth than war, pestilence and famine combined. It blasts the brightest hopes, dries up the fountain of the purest affection, and breathes its withering curse upon numberless happy homes. It selects its victims from the highest, as well as from the lowest in society, and strikes down with equal force the occupant of the pulpit and the poor house. Oh, the inexpressible agonies that have been wrung from human hearts by the use of strong drink!

The terrible stuff smirches every one who has anything to do with it, even those who may not habitually drink it.

The only consistent attitude of a Christian towards the liquor traffic is that of intense, uncompromising and constant hostility. He cannot afford to compromise in the slightest degree. The whole business is so utterly wicked, devilish and ruinous, that no man who loves his fellows and has any regard for his future peace, can afford to have anything to do with it. There will come a day when thunderbolts of God's wrath will strike it, and then woe to the man who is in any way connected with it. The man who holds in his hand the sacred right of the franchise, and who gives his vote to the legislator who favors the liquor traffic, whether run by the State or the individual, will be pronounced equally guilty with the man who sells and the one who gives him the license to sell.

The saloon must go. Its influence is too debasing and destructive to be permitted to exist in any civilized community. The motherhood of America says it must go. The Church of the living Christ says it must go. The voice of countless ruined homes says it must go. The moan of ruined millions and of myriads more on the way to ruin says it must go.

The saloon must go.—Zion's Herald.

At the opening of the Supreme Court of New Foundland at Harbor Grace both the justice and the grand jury congratulated the people on the utter absence of crime in that large judicial district, which creditable state they attribute to the wise temperance legislation so well enforced.

In Pensacola, Fla., a man and his wife undertook to evade the law against Sunday liquor selling by forming themselves into a club and claiming its privileges. Four months each in jail and a heavy fine were the penalty which the mayor gave them, and we suppose that settles the club business in Pensacola for a while.—Presbyterian Standard.

The cry passed on. "Room for the leper, room for the leper." And he went forth alone, not one of all the many whom he loved nor she whose love was woven in the fibers of his heart to come and speak comfort unto him. Yea, he went forth his way. Sick, heartbroken, and alone to die. For God had cursed the leper.

As the disease of leprosy is fatally infectious so are the leprous germs of sin. The evil which is within us is very apt to become the evil which shall dwell within others. The wrongs we do against our own selves are truly apt to become the sins which others shall do unto themselves also, and as this infection implies that to scatter the germs of sin we must come in contact with others is it not a startling reflection that the people whom we are most liable to destroy by our sins are those who may be nearest and dearest to us? It will be the mother, herself stricken with the leprosy of sin, who will destroy her own daughter; the father his own son, the brother his own brother, the wife her sister. Kindred ties and companionship will only serve to facilitate the transmission of the deadly infection. Therefore should we not feel as did Robert E. Lee when he was one winter morning walking over the snows of Arlington? As he looked back he saw his ten-year-old boy trying to stretch his legs to step in his father's tracks. Then said the greatest man the south has produced for many a year, "If my boy is going to try to walk in the path I am walking in, I must be very careful that I always walk in the path of purity and truth and honor and right." If our dear ones, those closest to us in life, are those most in danger of infection from our spiritual leprosy, there is another reason why, for their sakes if not for our own, we should seek the divine germicide, to have the cleansing which Naaman, the leper, received when, at God's command, he dipped seven times in the river Jordan and his flesh became like unto that of a little child.

The Infection of Sin.

May none of us ever experience the remorse a broken hearted father felt many years ago. He was bending over the bleeding body of his only son, who had just been brought home in a dying condition from a drunken carousal. "Oh, my child!" he cried. "Why did you do this? Why have you broken your mother's and father's hearts?" The dying boy cruelly looked up into the face of his weeping parent and answered: "Why, father, what are you crying for? I am dying as the result of your sins as well as mine. You first taught me to drink at your own table. You are as much to blame as I." Yes, the infectious results of our own leprous sins are evidenced in the temporal and eternal destruction of those who ought to be nearest and dearest to our affectionate hearts.

Leprosy is to be found in the homes of the rich and the poor alike; in the palace and in the hovel; at the king's banquet table, as well as in the beggars' gutter. For many years the world supposed that leprosy was able to thrive only in the pestilential alleys and filthy dens of the east. That supposition was totally wrong. Leprosy may originally start among the low social outcasts, but the leprous germs can live and thrive under the dazzling lights of a brilliant ballroom as well as in the stifling air of the dark hovel of a criminals' retreat. By handling the coin which is publicly used in India a traveler may become infected with leprosy, some leper having handled the same coin. By simply touching a rock at the foot of which a leprous beggar had crouched a prince arrived in all the brilliant robes of royalty, may become a leper.

A few years ago the most influential man of the king's court in the Sandwich Islands was supposed to be an eccentric individual because he always wore a glove upon his left hand, but one day that courtier was compelled to take off his left glove, and he was found to be a leper.

The Indifference of the Rich.

The last people on earth to believe that they can be destroyed by the leprous germs of sin are the rich, the affluent and the honored. It is easy enough to persuade the poor outcast, despised for her sins by the whole human race, that she needs Christ. It is easy enough to persuade the poor drunkard, writhing in the fatal clasp of delirium, that he needs supernatural aid; but, oh, it is hard to persuade the rich man, the honored, the respectable man, to feel that the leprous germs of sin may be imbedded in his own flesh.

Affluence and worldly honor sometimes seem to make men indifferent to all that is vital for time and eternity. They are blinded to their sins and scoff at the warning that their own fate may yet be that of the multitudes who, in the palaces of the rich and the great, have perished from the same indifference.

Reckless and indifferent was the attitude of the people of London during the great plague about two centuries ago. Ainsworth, the historian, tells us that during those harrowing and gruesome months the London stores were nearly all closed. The doors of the private homes were nearly all barred and bolted save when they were opened at the approach of the bell ringer who was seated upon a pile of stenchful corpses because he was out driving the dead cart and collecting the different bodies of the dead. Yet at that time in London there were men and women who whistled and laughed and danced and sang and blasphemed under the very shadow of these horrors.

But, though the leprosy of the soul, like the leprosy of the flesh, be a disease beyond the reach of the human soul, I would again draw your attention to the fact that it yields to the touch of the Divine Physician, as the affliction of Naaman yielded at the Jordan waters. And there are especially two or three incidents about the physical cure of Naaman with which I would drive this truth home and lead you to the fountain of life. The first was that he was induced to travel from Damascus to the home of the Prophet Elisha through the influence of a little captive Jewish maiden who was a slave of Naaman's wife. I can imagine the little Jewish slave lying awake upon her humble couch as night after night she hears the great Syrian general tramping up and down in his palace rooms. She hears him groan when he is awake. She hears him moan in his sleep because he is a hopeless leper. She hears him toss restlessly about upon his bed. She hears him the more readily because she is sleeping in a nearby room, at the foot of Naaman's wife's bed, or in an adjacent room to her mistress. Then she hears the general and his wife talking of the cause of Naaman's trouble. So one day she timidly pulls at her mistress' skirts and says: "Mistress, why do you not have master seek the prophet of Israel? He would cure him of his leprosy!" Then the horses were hitched to the chariots. Then the journey was taken to the faroff prophet's home.

Do you know where your boy spent last evening?

THE FARMVILLE DISTRICT.

The resolution below was unanimously adopted at the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Chase City charge:

Whereas the absorption of the Farmville District has resulted in serious complications—to-wit: The loss of the district parsonage, which has been well kept by the district, the embarrassment of the W. F. M. Society as it was operated in the Farmville District as a society of said district, the entailing of more work on some, if not all the presiding elders involved in the changes than can be satisfactorily done, in that it has failed signally in accomplishing the ostensible design of such change, which was to lessen the expense of presiding elders on each pastoral charge and other troubles which might be named; therefore be it Resolved by the Fourth Quarterly Conference of the Chase City charge, That we earnestly desire and request the presiding officer of the ensuing Virginia Annual Conference, Bishop W. W. Duncan, to restore the Farmville District as it existed previous to the session of the Conference of 1900.

LUCIUS GREGORY,
Secretary of Conference.

VERANDA VIEWS.

Mr. Editor,—I do not sit on the veranda all the time. I have been away from it, up in Kentucky, looking after the interests of my college for girls. While there I attended the Louisville Conference. I was a member of this Conference fourteen years ago, and served two years as pastor of Walnut Street church, in Louisville. But fourteen years make many changes in an Annual Conference. A great many noble men who were in the Conference then have passed into "the great unseen"; many new faces, entirely strange to me, fill the ranks. I suppose I am one of the seniors. But I am not one of "the fathers," as Dr. Tigert humorously insists on making me appear. By the way, the portly Book Editor is a member of this Conference, and is held in high esteem by the brethren. His genial smile is like sunshine, and his fellowship one of the good things in the Conference.

The Conference met this year at Columbia, the "shire town," as Dr. Laferty would call it, of Adair county, twenty miles away from the railroad. It was a sight to see the stages and hacks that carried the preachers from Campbellsville, the railroad station, to Columbia. One big four-horse concern was "a double decker," and had a lot of "the clergy" on the top. I was more fortunate, and was carried over the twenty miles behind a spanking team of Kentucky bays by Mr. Charles Wright, of Campbellsville. I was fortunate, too, in having for my companions my little son, Brevard, who was making his first trip to Conference, and Mr. Henry Spence, representative of the Publishing House. Mr. Spence was leader of the choir during the four years I was at McKendree, in Nashville, and was one of the best choir leaders I ever had. He did not profess to be a star singer himself, but he knew how to get other people to sing, how to handle the different elements that constitute a choir, and had a proper sense of the relation the choir sustained to the pastor. What magnificent music we had in old McKendree! At our services of song, which were far from being "sacred concerts," but were real jubilees of praise, standing room could not be had in McKendree, and Mr. Spence led them with his baton.

Once in Columbia, the Conference was royally entertained. Railroad, electric lines, telegraphs, telephones, and all the myriad "conveniences" of up-to-date life have their advantages; but they are the death of hospitality. If you want to go where people are really glad to see you, where they feel that it is a privilege to entertain you, and have time to enjoy your society and let you enjoy theirs, you must go away back into the country. Columbia, like all the rest of the world, however, is not satisfied until she gets a railroad, and boasted of the fine prospect of an electric line to Campbellsville soon. Then good-bye to many good things.

I did not remain long at the Conference, being called elsewhere. Bishop Morrison kindly gave me the floor at 10 A. M. in behalf of Logan College, and I preached at 11 A. M. to an immense audience in the Presbyterian church. The Lord was present in power. It was a Pentecostal season, and was still in full tide when I made my way through a window, caught a perspiration, rode without dinner twenty miles, and preached again at night, when we had a most refreshing time. Glory to God for the honor of being a preacher of the Gospel. Others may have the offices, so they leave me my license to tell dying men about eternal life in Christ. I would willingly spend and be spent in this transcendent work—

"Happy if with my latest breath,
I may but gasp His name
Preach Him to all, and cry in death, Behold, behold the Lamb!"

I hurried on to Memphis to be present at the celebration of the 76th anniversary of the First Methodist church. Great preparation was made to make this a memorable occasion, and the issue realized the most ardent hopes of those who planned it. Bishop Hoss, Mr. J. W. Powell, of Buffalo, N. Y., Rev. Dr. Smart, Rev. Dr. Mahon, and the undersigned, were the guests of the occasion, the last three former pastors. I had the honor, though an unpopular one at the time, of preaching the old church down, purchasing the lot, getting the plans, and starting the enterprise of the new church. Dr. Mahon followed me, and broke ground. The present church was built under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Miller, now deceased. But since its erection the church has carried the burden of $45,000 debt. The plans contemplated paying off that debt on the occasion of this anniversary. The services opened at 9 A. M. with a sort of religious sociable, or reception to Mr. and Mrs. Powell. At 10 A. M. Bishop Hoss preached on "The Church," at 11 A. M. Mr. Powell took subscriptions for the debt. After a sort interim for dinner, the great Sunday school, presided over by that past master of Sunday school work, Mr. John R. Pepper, held its jubilee. A pretty feature of this programme was "the march of the babies," or the review of the future Sunday school. Fifty fathers and mothers, with infants in their arms, answered to the call of the "Baby Roll," and marched through the church in the presence of twenty-five hundred people. The old pastors made brief talks, and Mr. Powell took subscriptions. At the evening service Bishop Hoss preached, and Mr. Powell took subscriptions. The sermon of Bishop Hoss, though delivered under conditions calculated to cramp any speaker, were masterly productions. I have not heard him for a long time. He is a great preacher. He sees deep into the heart of things, and his accurate scholarship and wide learning enable him to unfold meanings of the Holy Word hidden from other eyes. In the evening sermon there were passages of great rhetorical beauty, and both the morning and evening discourses were delivered with a grace and unction that made a profound impression.

What shall I say of Mr. Joseph W. Powell? Well, I have heard men beg, but this man is the champion of the noble fraternity of beggars for good causes. He reasons, he ridicules, he exhorts, he entreats, until the most indifferent is aroused and most reluctant persuaded to relent. He kept us in the dark all day as to how the subscription was going, and when he announced at the close of the evening service that the whole amount obtained was $50,500, it electrified the vast audience. And well it might. It was a glorious achievement. The First church has not much wealth in its membership. Only one subscription of $5,000 and six of $1,000 each was obtained. Nearly $40,000 was contributed by people of moderate means. Dr. Morris, the retiring pastor, was supremely happy, as well he might be. The splendid liberality of the people has relieved one of our best churches of a heavy incubus on its work. Henceforth it can give its strength to saving men. It was personally a great pleasure to worship with my dear old flock, to receive such touching evidence of their love after years of separation, and to find that time only endears the hallowed associations of the past.

Dr. Smart, who was present on this occasion, informed me that he had been transferred to Virginia. It is my own surmise, that he is slated for Epworth. He is a fine preacher, an excellent pastor, and a good man. If he goes to Epworth, I hope he will send for Mr. Powell, pay off that debt, and have, as I do not doubt he will, a glorious pastorate. Though no longer a member of the fraternity of "giraffes," though through force of habit I feel a good deal of interest in their movements. By the way, Dr. Alexander, lately professor of New Testament Greek in Vanderbilt University, has returned to the pastoral work, and is presiding elder of the Louisville District. There are two aspects of this case which please me—first, an able preacher prefers the pulpit to the professor's chair; and second, a first-class man, a scholar, a man of high repute, goes into the presiding eldership. We have abused this office until an archangel would hesitate to risk his reputation by accepting it. The only way to restore it to its former effectiveness is to put into it men of superior parts. Dr. Alexander succeeds Dr. B. M. Messick on the Louisville District. Dr. Messick is also one of our strong men, whose ability is only equalled by his modesty.

When I read some of our Church papers, and note the lack of real religious literature in their columns, I wonder why such men as some I have named

"Sandy, taking a last look at his team, like enough."

We walked slowly toward the stable, speaking no word. As we neared the door we heard the sound of a voice in the monotone of one reading. I stepped forward and looked through a chink between the logs. Graeme was about to open the door, but I held up my hand and beckoned him to me. In a vacant stall, where was a pile of straw, a number of men were grouped. Sandy, leaning against the tying post, upon which the stable lantern hung, was reading; Nelson was kneeling in front of him and gazing into the gloom beyond; Baptiste lay upon his stomach, his chin in his hands and his upturned eyes fastened upon Sandy's face; Lachlan Campbell sat with his hands clasped about his knees, and two other men sat near him. Sandy was reading the undying story of the prodigal, Nelson now and then stepping him to make a remark. It was a scene I have never been able to forget. Today I pause in my tale and see it as clearly as when I looked through the chink upon it years ago—the long, low stable, with log walls and upright hitching poles; the dim outlines of the horses in the gloom of the background and the little group of rough, almost savage looking, men, with faces wondering and reverent, lighted by the misty light of the stable lantern.

After the reading Sandy handed the book to Nelson, who put it in his pocket, saying:

"That's for us, boys, ain't it?"

"Aye," said Lachlan. "It is often that has been read in my hearing, but I am afraid it will not be for me whatever." And he swayed himself slightly as he spoke, and his voice was full of pain.

"The minister said I might come," said old Nelson earnestly and hopefully.

"Aye, but you are not Lachlan Campbell, and you have not had his privileges. My father was a godly elder in the Free Church of Scotland, and never a night or morning but we took the books."

"Yes, but he said 'any man,'" persisted Nelson, putting his hand on Lachlan's knee, but Lachlan shook his head.

"Dat young feller," said Baptiste—"wha's hees nem, heh?"

"He has no name. It is just a parable," explained Sandy.

"He's got no nem? He's just a parable? Das no young feller?" asked Baptiste anxiously. "Das mean notting?"

Then Nelson took him in hand and explained to him the meaning, while Baptiste listened even more eagerly, ejaculating softly: "Ah, voila! Bon! By ear!" When Nelson had finished, he broke out: "Dat young feller—his name Baptiste, heh? And de old Fadder—he's le bon Dieu? Bon! Das good sary for me. How you go back? You go to de pries?"

"The book doesn't say priest or any one else," said Nelson. "You go back in yourself, you see?"

"Non; das so, sure nuff. Ah!" As if a light broke in upon him. "You go in your own self. You make one leetle prayer. You say, 'Le bon Fadder, oh, I want come back. I so tire, so hongree, so sorree!' He say, 'Come right 'long.' Ah, das fuss rate! Nelson, you make one leetle prayer for Sandy and me."

Nelson lifted up his face and said: "Father, we're all gone far away; we have spent all; we are poor; we are tired of it all; we want to feel different, to be different; we want to come back. Jesus came to save us from our sins, and he said if we came he wouldn't cast us out, no matter how bad we were, if we only came to him. O Jesus Christ," and his old iron face began to work, and two big tears slowly came from under his eyelids. "We are a poor lot, and I'm the worst of the lot, and we are trying to find the way. Show us how to get back. Amen."

"Bon!" said Baptiste. "Das fetch him sure!"

Graeme pulled me away, and without a word we went into the office and drew up to the little stove. Graeme was greatly annoyed.

"Did you ever see anything like that?" he asked—"old Nelson, the hardest, savagest, toughest old sinner in the camp, on his knees before a lot of men!"

"Before God," I could not help saying, for the thing seemed very real to me. The old man evidently felt himself talking to some one.

"Yes, I suppose you're right," said Graeme doubtfully, "but there's a lot of stuff I can't swallow."

"When you take medicine, you don't swallow the bottle," I replied, for his trouble was not mine.

"If I were sure of the medicine, I wouldn't mind the bottle, and yet it acts well enough," he went on. "I don't mind Lachlan. He's a highland mystic and has visions. And Sandy's almost as bad, and Baptiste is an impulsive little chap. Those don't count much. But old man Nelson is a cool blooded, level headed old fellow; has seen a lot of life too. And then there's Craig. He has a better head than I have and is as hot blooded, and yet he is living and slaving away in that hole and really enjoys it. There must be something in it."

"Oh, look here, Graeme!" I burst out impatiently. "What's the use of your talking like that? Of course there's something in it. There's everything in it. The trouble with me is I can't face the music. It calls for a life where a fellow must go in for straight, steady work, self denial and that sort of thing, and I'm too bohemian for that, and too lazy. But that fellow Craig makes one feel horribly uncomfortable."

Graeme put his head on one side and examined me curiously.

"I believe you're right about yourself. You always were a luxurious beggar. But that's not where it catches me."

We sat and smoked and talked other things for an hour and then turned in. As I was dropping off I was roused by Graeme's voice:

"Are you going to the preparatory service on Friday night?"

"Don't know. I replied rather sleepily."

"I say, do you remember the preparatory service at home?" There was something in his voice that set me wide awake.

"Yes. Rather terrific, wasn't it? But I always felt better after it," I replied.

"To me"—he was sitting up in bed now—"to me it was like a call to arms, or, rather, like a call for a forlorn hope—none but volunteers wanted. Do you remember the thrill in the old governor's voice as he dared any but the right stuff to come on?"

"We'll go in on Friday night," I said.

And so we did. Sandy took a load of men with his team, and Graeme and I drove in the light sleigh.

The meeting was in the church, and over a hundred men were present. There was some singing of familiar hymns at first, and then Mr. Craig read the same story as we had heard in the stable, that most perfect of all parables, the prodigal son. Baptiste nudged Sandy in delight and whispered something, but Sandy held his face so absolutely expressionless that Graeme was moved to say:

"Look at Sandy! Did you ever see such a graven image? Something has hit him hard."

The men were held fast by the story. The voice of the reader, low, earnest and thrilling with the tender pathos of the tale, carried the words to our hearts, while a glance, a gesture, a movement of the body, gave us the vision of it all as he was seeing it.

Then, in simplest of words, he told us what the story meant, holding us the while with eyes and voice and gesture.

He compelled us to scorn the gay, heartless selfishness of the young fool setting forth so jauntily from the broken home; he moved our pity and our sympathy for the young profligate, who, broken and deserted, had still pluck enough to determine to work his way back, and who, in utter desperation, at last gave it up, and then he showed us the homecoming—the ragged, heartsick tramp, with hesitating steps, stumbling along the dusty road, and then the rush of the old father, his garments fluttering and his voice heard in broken cries. I see and hear it all now whenever the words are read.

He announced the hymn, "Just as I Am," read the first verse, and then went on: "There you are, men, every man of you, somewhere on the road. Some of you are too lazy"—here Graeme nudged me—"and some of you haven't got enough yet of the far country to come back. May there be a chance for you when you want to come! Men, you all want to go back home, and when you go you'll want to put on your soft clothes, and you won't go till you can go in good style. But where did the prodigal get his good clothes?"

Quick came the answer in Baptiste's shrill voice:

"From de old fadder!"

No one was surprised, and the minister went on:

"Yes, and that's where we must get the good, clean heart—the good, clean, brave heart—from our Father. Don't wait; but, just as you are, come. Sing."

They sang, not loud, as they would "Stand Up" or even "The Sweet By and By," but in voices subdued, holding down the power in them.

After the singing Craig stood a moment gazing down at the men and then said quietly:

"Any man want to come? You all want to come. We all must come."

Then, sweeping his arm over the audience and turning half round as if to move off, he cried in a voice that thrilled to the heart's core:

"Oh, come on! Let's go back!"

The effect was overpowering. It seemed to me that the whole company half rose to their feet. Of the prayer that immediately followed I only caught the opening sentence, "Father, we are coming back," for my attention was suddenly absorbed by Abe, the stage driver, who was sitting next me. I could hear him swearing approval and admiration, saying to himself:

"Ain't he a clinker? I'll be gee whizzly gol' dusted if he ain't a malleable iron, double back action, self adjusting corn cracker."

And the prayer continued, to be punctuated with like admiring and even more sulphurous expletives. It was an incongruous medley. The earnest, reverent prayer and the earnest, admiring profanity rendered chaotic one's ideas of religious propriety. The feelings in both were akin, the method of expression somewhat widely diverse.

After prayer Craig's tone changed utterly. In a quiet, matter of fact, businesslike way he stated his plan of organization and called for all who wished to join to remain after the benediction. Some fifty men were left, among them Nelson, Sandy, Lachlan Campbell, Baptiste, Shaw, Nixon, Geordie and Billy Breen, who tried to get out, but was held fast by Geordie.

Graeme was passing out, but I signed him to remain, saying that I wished "to see the thing out." Abe sat still beside me, swearing disgustedly at the fellows "who were goin' back on the preacher." Craig appeared amazed at the number of men remaining and seemed to fear that something was afoot. He put before them the terms of discipleship, as the Maker put them to the eager scribe, and he did not make them easy. He pictured the kind of work to be done and the kind of men needed for the doing of it. Abe grew uneasy as the minister went on to describe the completeness of the surrender, the intensity of the loyalty demanded.

"That knocks me out, I reckon," he muttered in a disappointed tone. "I ain't up to that grade." And as Craig described the heroism called for, the magnificence of the fight, the worth of it and the outcome of it all Abe ground out, "I'll be blanked if I wouldn't like to take a hand, but I guess I'm not in it."

Craig finished by saying:

"I want to put this quite fairly. It is not any league of mine. You're not joining my company. It is no easy business, and it is for your whole life. What do you say? Do I put it fairly? What do you say, Nelson?"

Nelson rose slowly and with difficulty began:

"I may be all wrong, but you made it easier for me, Mr. Craig. You said he would see me through, or I should never have risked it. Perhaps I am wrong." And the old man looked troubled.

Craig sprang up.

"No, no! Thank God, no! He will see every man through who will trust his life to him—every man, no matter how tough he is, no matter how broken."

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

GENESIS OF PROTESTANTISM.

The analogy between the condition of the Church during the fifteenth century and that of France prior to the great Revolution has more than once been pointed out. In both cases all things were ripe for a complete overturning of old systems. There was a similar blindness to the condition of inferiors, and to the coming catastrophe. "There was," says Guizot, "the same desire for the progress of intelligence, and for the acquirement of new ideas; the same taste for an easy and agreeable life, the same luxury, the same licentiousness; there was the same want of political energy, and of moral principles, combined with singular activity of mind. The literati of the fifteenth century stood in the same relation to the prelates of the Church as the men of letters and the philosophers of the eighteenth did to the nobility. They lived agreeably together, and gave themselves no uneasiness about the storms that were gathering about them. The prelates of the fifteenth century no more foresaw Luther and Calvin than the courtiers of Louis XIV. foresaw the French Revolution."

The state of Europe was ripe for any change that would free the people from the exacting authority of the Church. The numerous attempts at reform had been put down with an iron hand, and their traces wiped out in blood. But it only needed that some movement against Rome should become powerful enough to maintain itself for all Europe to join in it. It is true that the revival of learning was, to some extent, the revival of paganism in Italy. But in Germany, on the contrary, the new learning was from the first cultivated in a religious spirit. Wittenburg University, the birthplace of the Reformation, was founded in 1502. In 1508, Martin Luther, a monk of great learning and deep piety, was called to its chair of philosophy; a man who held to the doctrines of the fathers, and who considered the Church the ordained instrument of God for the conversion of the world. He looked upon the Pope and the whole system with the greatest reverence. And although in a journey to the cloisters of Missina and Thuringia he gained his first insight into the corruptions of clergy and people, this did not shake his faith in the Church. He had himself fully experienced the truth of the writing, that "the just shall live by faith," and although he saw this doctrine daily violated, yet, in his innocence, he supposed that all these corruptions were in violation of the law of the Church.

Tetzel, a Dominican monk, first brought the sale of indulgences into the vicinity of Wittenburg in order to collect money for the building of the lordly cathedral of St. Peter's in Rome, and by his shameless and open prostitution of the doctrine of forgiveness, so scandalized the people that Luther applied to the Bishop of Mayence to suppress him, claiming that forgiveness and salvation are the result of internal repentance, and not merely the external evidence of contrition. Receiving unfavorable replies to his communications, he determined to make his opposition public. In this warfare against the practices of Tetzel, Luther's design was not to assume a hostile attitude towards the Church, but to vindicate her sacred name from the stigma which he believed had been cast upon it. He thought that the Pope was entirely ignorant of the use made of his name, and needed only to be notified of it in order to correct it.

"On the 31st of October, 1517, at 12 o'clock, Luther posted his ninety-five theses on the door of the University. In them he declared that the power of forgiveness is with God alone; that the Pope can merely announce this forgiveness. That this power belongs no less to priests and bishops than to the Pope; that the Pope can only absolve from those punishments which he alone inflicts, and which extend no farther than this life. If the Pope can release souls from purgatory, why not free the world with a word? Luther had no ambition to gratify. He was actuated simply by his earnest conviction of duty, and believed that he was but expressing the will of the Pope and the true doctrines of his beloved religion. These writings, which, to us now seem so axiomatic, raised a hue and cry over all Christendom, and Luther was summoned to Rome for trial. By the intercession of Frederick, the Elector of Saxony and the patron of the Reformation, this was changed to an interview with Cardinal Catejan at Augsburg. This legate's arbitrary demands of retraction, without a discussion of the disputed points, was civilly but firmly refused. "I will not," writes Luther, "become a heretic by denying the truth by which I became a Christian; sooner will I die, be burnt, be banished, be anathemised."

When the papal bull arrived from Rome, condemning the attacks on indulgences, Luther was greatly grieved, and appealed from the Pope to a general council. Still did he expect a vindication from the Church authorities. Then followed the memorable Leipsic disputation, in which he left no point undefended, and no opponent unanswered. The breach with Rome was widened still farther at this time by Luther's declaration that many of the doctrines of Huss, which the Council of Constance had condemned, were perfectly right and orthodox. In the fall of 1520 the alienation became complete by the papal bull of Leo X. This condemned forty-one heresies in Luther's writings, ordered them burnt wherever found, and, under pain of excommunication, summoned him to retract in sixty days and sue for pardon at Rome. This was the manner in which the indolent and bigoted Leo X. settled the whole question. From this time the bridge was cut behind the great reformer. On December 20th, he burned this bull, with all the canon law of Rome, before the doors of the University, and in the presence of a vast multitude. The threatened excommunication soon followed, and Luther was summoned before the Emperor at the memorable Diet of Worms. To the entreaties of his friends to remain away, he uttered the historic words: "Though there were as many devils in Worms as there are tiles on its roofs, still would I enter." Here he nobly and ably defended his conduct and doctrines by the evidence of Scripture, and when pressed with the question as to whether he would recant, we hear him say: "Unless I shall be convinced by the testimonies of the Scriptures, or by evident reason (for I believe neither Pope nor councils alone, since they have often erred and contradicted themselves), I am bound by the Scriptures I have quoted, and my conscience is held captive by the Word of God; and as it is neither safe nor right to act against conscience, I cannot, and will not, retract anything." And he added: "Here I stand; I cannot otherwise; God help me. Amen." The ban of the empire was proclaimed in a month against the reformer, and Luther became an exile.

Then followed his withdrawal to Wortburg, until the irregularities of his successors at Wittenburg caused him to come forth to quell the disturbance. Communism had been proclaimed, the churches rifled, images destroyed, and the reform movement was about to become a revolution. Luther met this with argument for the leaders, and with sermons for the people.

The Diet of Nuremberg refused to enforce the decree of Worms, and held that the doctrines of the reformers were too much a matter of conscience, and that suppression by force would breed too grave political disorders. For the menacing superiority of Charles V. was creating alarm throughout Europe, and we find the Pope and Francis of France encouraging the reformers in the empire. By the Diet of Spire in 1526, it was agreed that each State should act in accordance with its own conscience, in regard to the Edict of Worms, until the summoning of a general council. Thus the war of the Pope and the Emperor necessitated the tolerating of the Lutherans. Meanwhile the movement of reform spread throughout Germany, and the labors of Zwingle in Switzerland were crowned with great success. At the triumph of the Emperor over the Pope, another Diet of Spire was held (1529) reversing the decision of the former one, and absolutely forbidding the propagation of the new doctrines. The protest, which was entered by the Lutheran princes against the proceedings of this council, gave the name of Protestants to the reforming party, and in 1530 the Emperor, flushed with success, met the different complainants at the memorable Diet of Augsburg. It was deemed unwise for Luther to attend this council, and the celebrated confession was drawn up by Melancthon. But upon no formulæ could the Catholic and Protestant representatives agree concerning the works of penance, submission to the priest, and the invocation of saints; so that the majority of the Diet ordered the restoration of the old observances and allowed the Protestants a year to reflect, after which time coercion would be employed. This menace of the Emperor and the Cardinals led to the formation by the Protestant princes of the Protestant Defensive League of Smalcald, to which the cities of south Germany were soon admitted.

During this time, notwithstanding the efforts of the Emperor, the Reformation advanced with giant strides. Wurtemberg, Hesse, Bradenburg, and ducal Saxony had become Protestant. Catholic princes were beginning to give their subjects freedom of worship. The league became more and more powerful by the accession of more princes and cities, by alliance with the Dukes of Bavaria, and by treaties with France and Denmark. These facts, together with the wars of Charles with France, rendered the execution of the threats made at Augsburg impossible, and greatly advanced the progress of the Reformation. The waning popularity of the Emperor as he grew old, and the internal dissensions of his kingdom, finally destroyed all his long cherished plans for the extirpation of "heresy." And in 1555, by the great Religious Peace of Augsburg, Protestantism gained a legal recognition. Toleration and equal rights with the Catholics were granted its followers. Captive princes were released, and the full practice of their religious rights, without hindrance or loss of civil privileges, was granted the Reformers.

In a remarkably short time the Reformation spread through all Europe, even in Austria and Bavaria. Had it not been for the Ecclesiastical Reservation in the Southern countries, all Germany would soon have become Protestant.

COLPORTAGE.

For the want of a practical, successful system of colportage, which would put our literature more largely in the hands of our people, the Methodist Church has for years been losing in membership and in influence. It will not do to say that those persons going from under Methodist influence and uniting with other churches were a small loss to us, and would not have made good Methodists. Such a statement is gratuitous, and, besides, we are losing good people, who were not grounded in our doctrines, and when they hear the doctrines of other Churches plausibly presented, and often reiterated, they fall victims easily to the wiles of proselytes. If our books, pamphlets and papers were circulated among our people as they ought to be, this state of things would be largely corrected. In the bounds of every charge at least one colporteur a year should find his way to sell Bibles, our doctrinal works, that our people may learn the doctrines that we hold and our own religious papers be put in Methodist homes.

We have doctrinal books and pamphlets strong in character and unanswerable in argument that lie on the shelves of our publishing house at Nashville. Colporters in the field, these books would be carried to the homes of our people and read by old and young. In our rural sections the opportunities for circulating our literature are fine. The people are able and willing to buy books not large in size nor high priced, which is not desirable, but publications that in small compass give the cream of Methodist teaching in regard to Bible doctrines that we as a Church hold. In our efforts to be so very liberal in our views and practices as a Church, it is to be feared that we have become slack twisted and our machinery so loose and neglected that it bids fair to fall to pieces. The reading of our literature will wonderfully change for the better this state of things. The colporter must be in the field. Book stores here and there won't meet our demands in this matter.

We don't wish, of course, to be out of touch with the General Conference in this or in any other matter, but the failure to circulate our literature among our people is telling in a way that is not pleasant to think about. We know that already we are burdened as a Church with collections to be raised. It won't do to increase these burdens. Money is what we need to work successfully a colportage plan. Would it not pay far better to use for colportage the money we now raise for needy Sunday schools, which, we believe, is not always wisely used?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, October 15, 1902.

The anthracite coal strike has necessitated active measures on the part of the various charitable organizations and church societies with a view to obviating the inevitable suffering to the poor which will be precipitated by the first cold wave. Even the immediate settlement of the strike, which is now looked for, will not entirely obviate this suffering, as, according to local coal dealers, the price of both anthracite and bituminous coal will remain high for some time, and the price of coal oil, to which the poorer classes naturally turned in the absence of their natural fuel, has been advanced. The Citizens' Relief Association has already appointed a committee to raise funds to procure the necessary fuel. It is the desire of the association first to secure contracts for coal at wholesale prices, and sell it to the poor at actual cost and in small quantities. The same policy will be pursued in regard to wood, and it is anticipated that wood yards will be established, where the most needy and unemployed will be given an opportunity to earn a modicum of fuel by sawing the wood and otherwise preparing it for consumption. It is also desired to accumulate some coal for free distribution in those cases where the committee finds that serious want is being occasioned by its lack, and where the sufferers are unable to purchase it. Several church societies are planning for entertainments, the proceeds from which will be devoted to the purchase of fuel for distribution to the needy.

Last Sunday marked the reopening of two Washington churches which have been thoroughly renovated and repaired during the vacation season. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, who recently returned from his summer vacation, reopened the New York Avenue church. The interior of the main auditorium has been entirely redecorated and presents a most pleasing appearance. The decorations are in Colonial style to harmonize with the exterior of the building. The ceiling is painted in white and cream, and the walls in tones of delicate green. The ante-room is done in light tones of old red and cream. An extensive instillation of electric lights has been made, and a new and satisfactory system of ventilation has been put in.

The Epworth church was also opened after a season of repairs on last Sunday. The walls have been painted in appropriate designs and symbolic frescoes have been placed at intervals. The pulpit has been handsomely decorated and now harmonizes with the general scheme of decoration. The sermon on last Sunday was preached by Rev. Jefferson W. Duffey, presiding elder of the Washington district. The evening service was conducted by Rev. J. O. Knott, of Baltimore.

Last evening the District of Columbia Epworth League held its first meeting of the league year, this being the first occasion the new cabinet has met to map out the year's work. New presidents have been elected to a number of local leagues, and the installation of new officers will be conducted by the District League officers.

A large number of Washingtonians have gone to Boston to attend the annual Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which held its sessions from October 9th to 12th, inclusive. One of the pleasant events of the Convention was the meeting with the St. Paul's Society of Harvard University, when the audience was addressed by Bishop Henry Potter, Rev. W. S. Rainsford, and Mr. John R. Mott, general secretary of the World's Christian Federation. The Washington delegation to the Convention took occasion to remain over in Boston for several days to visit Harvard, etc.

Rev. L. B. Ridgely, of Wuchang, China, gave an interesting account of the Chinese mission situation at Trinity church recently. He said: "The heathen of China are calling on us to teach them. The Chinese are forming guilds for the study of the Bible and are asking for literature and for missionaries to teach them. This without having been even approached by Christian missionaries. Two motives lead the Chinese to profess Christianity. Many think of personal advantage in dealing with Christians. Many, however, are sincere in their desire to accept the religion of Christ. None is received for baptism until he has demonstrated his fitness for acceptance." The speaker said that, even though China should be divided among the nations, which he did not believe would ever be done, the people would remain unchanged and undivided, and would never be absorbed by other peoples.

Lady Henry Somerset recently arrived in this country. She made a statement for publication, in which she said she wished it distinctly understood that her work was not to be confounded with the methods pursued by Mrs. Carrie Nation. She further said that she rejoiced in the abolition of the army canteen as it used to exist, and quoted Lord Roberts, who has said that "temperance promotes the efficiency of any fighting force, and betters the service in every way."

THE FIRST STRIKE IN HISTORY.

There is surely some ground for saying that "History repeats itself" when we remember that the first strike which is recorded in the annals of the race sprung from the same causes, involved the same issues, was fomented by the same interests, and produced the same results as the last.

The story of that early emeute is recorded in the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel, and the strike occurred just as Rehoboam came to the throne, succeeding his father, Solomon. Great industrial operations were then carried on by the king, to whom the common people owed labor as well as military service. It was by the hands of the subject that cities were builded, palaces were reared, gardens were planted and caravans were laden for distant realms.

We are all familiar with the story of Solomon's magnificence; but that magnificence cost tens of thousands of the people's ceaseless toil. A great empire did not spring from the wilderness by any magical art. It required years of unremitting toil, paid only in the protection which a powerful sovereign can afford his subjects.

But upon Solomon's death, when Rehoboam came to Shechem to be acknowledged as succeeding to these royal rights, the people by their chosen exponents complained that the burdens laid upon them were too onerous for the advantages enjoyed. They would not refuse to work for the royal occupant of the throne; but they asked, with some pardonable show of spirit, that their hours of labor be shortened; that the toil exacted of them be lessened, and that their rights as well as their duties should be taken into consideration.

And then came the haughty, supercilious, exasperating reply of the overlord. "My father made your work long and heavy, did he? I'll make it heavier than he ever dreamed of." And the result? Why, naturally, "a strike." And ten-twelfths of all the laborers in the kingdom turned upon their heels with the taunt, "We are going home. Now you young striplings of the house of David see what you can do without us." And the outcome was a breach of amity, a weakening of the national forces, a loss of prestige, which, to this day, has never been recovered. From what did it all spring? The chronicler tells us that it was because Rehoboam "spake roughly" to these representatives of labor; and a harsh word from a man conscious of his power and vain of his authority wrought a more disastrous result than any war of his own age.

How significant it is that during this exchange of boasts and threats there was present one shrewd and cunning agitator, who was fomenting trouble for his own purposes. Jeroboam knew that if he could only get the royal heir to play the fool in refusing to arbitrate, he could egg on the embittered masses to play the game out for his own advantage. He was "the people's friend." He was the advocate of their claims. He would "stand by them to the bitter end. They must never give in. Now was the time to regain their ancient and natural liberties. They must strike now or forever be slaves." So the ten tribes struck. And straightway they marched off to Samaria under the leadership of Jeroboam, and in the end built for Jeroboam the capital they had refused to erect for the surly fool descended from David and Solomon. All of which goes to show that it pays better to be a smooth demagogue than a bumptious prince. Which party gained the first strike? Neither. The only one that made anything out of it was Jeroboam, "the walking delegate." He established a second-class kingdom; built himself a cheap palace and subjected to his own aggrandizement the ten tribes who revolted from the king.

But neither kingdom ever attained the position that belonged to the Davidic reign. They never held among the nations the respect that they paid to the unified and univen estate of Solomon. And as for Rehoboam, he lived to rue bitterly as a tributary prince of Egypt's lord the folly of a "rough word" when a soft answer might have made the masses his friends. Two kingdoms were henceforth to exist side by side, each a thorn in the other's flesh, and each weak in the presence of their common foes. What good came of it? Rehoboam gratified his pride. The people gratified their revenge. Jeroboam waxed fat. But the strength of Israel was forever broken and her ancient splendor forever lost.

From that day to this, under every form of government and all changes of society, strikes have taken place. In nine cases out of ten they have arisen from a sense of injustice. They have been brought to a head by ill-mannered and violent speech upon the part of men conscious of power; and they have been fomented by other men whose sole hope of gain lay in the disturbing of present relations. But in the end neither of the original parties ever gains all it seeks. For years, for ages, for generations it may be, millions of wretched sufferers have cause to regret an outcome which might have been avoided by the soft answer, the gentle word, the patient consideration of perhaps exaggerated complaints; and a nation which ought to have led the progress of the world becomes a jest and a by-word among stronger neighbors who see God's people destroyed by their own folly.

Will nations ever learn the lesson? That is not so important for us to answer as the question, Will we ever learn the lesson? If the rich Rehoboam lacks self-control there is always near at hand some cunning Jeroboam to see that the ten tribes resent his ugly words. It is easier to inflame great passions than to subdue them. More strikes are caused by indignities than by injustice. And he who can rule his own spirit is, as the wise man says, greater than he that taketh a city. He holds a vaster power and retains it longer.—Interior.

Plans are being perfected for a World's Total Abstinence pledge-signing crusade, with a revival of the old-time temperance meetings, in churches, halls and school-houses, with opportunities for pledge-signing of men, women and children.—The National Advocate.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON V, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 2.

Text of the Lesson, Josh. xi, 1-9.
Memory Verses, 1-4—Golden Text,
Ps. xli, 1—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.
1. The Lord also spake unto Joshua.

How important and how wonderful a statement, but how little heed one is apt to give to it! That the only living and true God should talk with a mortal man should be enough to make all mortals give heed and earnestly inquire as to what He said. Men waste time talking of trivial matters, but not so the Lord. He never says anything unimportant. "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth, for the Lord hath spoken" (Isa. i, 2; Deut. xxxii, 1). "God, who in sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son." "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh" (Heb. i, 1, 2; xii, 25).

2. Speak to the children of Israel, saying, Appoint out for you cities of refuge, whosoever I spake unto you by the hand of Moses.

In Ex. xxi, 13; Num. xxxv, 6, 11; Deut. xix, 2, 9, we find that which God had said to Moses concerning these cities, three on each side of Jordan. Every purpose of the Lord shall be performed both for His people and against His enemies. This matter of these cities was in His purpose, as He had said to Moses, and now the time had come to perform His purpose. From all eternity everything that ever has come to pass or ever will come to pass was all foreseen or foreordained by God (Acts xv, 18; Eph. iii, 11).

3. And they shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood.

The avenger or revenger of blood takes us back to Gen. ix, 6, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed," and this word to Noah was repeated to Israel in Ex. xxi, 12, 13, with the saving clause that if a man killed another unintentionally God would provide a refuge for such. Justice required that a willful murderer should forfeit his own life, but the same justice said that one killing another accidentally was not guilty of murder, and the city of refuge was for him to flee to. God giveth to all life and breath and all things (Acts xvii, 25), and He will not have His gifts despised or ill treated. Yet He is not willing that any should perish, and He has no pleasure in the death even of the wicked (11 Pet. iii, 9; Ezek. xxxiii, 11). All mankind are guilty before God and sinners in His sight, and all deserve to die for their sins, but God has provided at infinite cost a refuge for every penitent sinner in His dear Son by virtue of His great sacrifice.

4. They shall take him into the city unto them and give him a place that he may dwell among them.

There was a way prepared to each city of refuge (Deut. xix, 3) and every facility to enable the unintentional murderer to reach the place of refuge, and this verse tells how the people of the city were to welcome and care for him; but these cities of refuge were only for those who were not really guilty, as described in Deut. xix, 4-6. Our refuge, the Lord Jesus Christ, is for the guilty, the lost, the unrighteous, the ungodly, for God commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us, and because of His sacrifice God can be just and yet the justifier of the ungodly who believe in Jesus (Rom. v, 8; iii, 26; iv, 5), assuring a welcome to every one who truly comes to Him (John vi, 37).

5. And if the avenger of blood pursue after him, then shall they not deliver the slayer up into his hand.

The man to be feared was "the avenger" (verses 3, 5, 9), or as it is in Num. xxxv, 19, 21, 24, 25, 27, "the revenger." The same word is translated "redeemer" in Job xix, 25; Ps. xix, 14; Isa. xli, 14; xliii, 14, and a dozen other places; in Ruth ii, 20; iii, 9, etc., it is "a near kinsman" or in the margin "one that hath right to redeem," all of which is at least suggestive of the precious truth that the Avenger whom the sinner has a right to fear has taken upon Himself our nature, made Himself one of us, sin excepted, and, having no sin of His own, suffered our sins to be laid upon Him, and by dying in our stead the just for the unjust has become our Redeemer, our true City of Refuge. He also is Himself the prepared way (John xiv, 6; Heb. x, 20), and He Himself welcomes all who come to Him and assures them of their eternal safety (John x, 27, 28).

6. He shall dwell in that city until the death of the high priest.

If at any time he was found outside of the city before the death of the high priest, the avenger was free to kill him if he found him (Num. xxxv, 26-28), and here is a suggestion of the truth that by the death of our High Priest on the cross in our stead we are made free from all condemnation. It is His resurrection from the dead that really makes us free, for if He be not risen we are yet in our sins (1 Cor. xv, 17).

7-9. These were the cities appointed for all the children of Israel and for the stranger that sojourneth among them that whosoever killeth any person at unawares might flee thither.

Note God's appointed refuge for Israel or the stranger, and note also the blessed "whosoever" reminding us of John iii, 16; Rev. xxii, 17. According to Canon Fausset, the very name of each city is suggestive of the Lord Jesus Christ—Kedesh, holy (Heb. vii, 26); Shechem, shoulder (Isa. ix, 6); Hebron, fellowship (1 Cor. i, 9); Bezer, fortress (Ps. xviii, 2); Ramoth, high (Acts v, 31); Golan, joy (Rom. v, 11; Ps. xliii, 4). While it is not possible for those who are truly in Christ ever to be lost, according to John x, 27-29, yet a truly saved person may not live in the fellowship which is his privilege and thus experience much loss here and hereafter (1 Cor. iii, 14, 15).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 2, "The Best Gift"—Text, 1 Cor. xii, 28-31; xlii, 1-13.

Painters have for ages surrounded the heads of the apostles with a halo, distinguishing them from the common multitude of disciples. Writers have honored them with an elevation above all others in the church of Christ. The grades of dignity in service shown in this Scripture have been recognized in all ages since apostles followed their Master and founded His church. Prophets, teachers, miracle workers, healers of disease, rulers and exhorters have been honored in varying degrees according to their relative worth. The desire to be able to exercise any one of these offices has been considered a worthy ambition. The people have ever been quick to recognize in the young special abilities and gifts of mind and spirit which would indicate ability for any of these sacred offices.

Eloquence has ever commanded an audience whether the prophet was Stephen, Paul, Chrysostom, Luther, Wesley or some "boy preacher." Ability to bring things to pass has been quickly discerned, and the able one usually has been put where he could use his gift. Prominence has not necessarily been given those whose offices and work kept them ever before the public eye and mind. Sometimes this prominence and the power associated with high position have been more regarded than the ability to worthily fill the place or than the duty and service which the place required. Desire for eminence, applause and fame has at times raised some who had no desire to be servants for their fellow men, but who have mistaken the purpose of office and gifts in God's church and considered the receiving of homage and deference to be the due of the favored one rather than serving others to be his duty and the sole reason why he should occupy position.

Paul soberly and accurately measures the comparative values of these things. Eloquence may be priceless or worthless, if not even worse. Its test is not the faultlessness of its logic, not in the brilliancy of its rhetoric, the attractive personality of the speaker, not even in the contagion of his zeal. All these may be present and the eloquence be that of an actor simulating the character he has no intention to emulate and awakening admiration in his hearers for his skill in delineation of passion, but never moving them to passionate purpose of good. Something more and deeper is needed to make eloquence of true worth. The burning heart must be under it all—the passion of love; then words will be fire and kindle fire.

Learning is but an encyclopedic mass of rubbish until it be marshaled and led by a great passion of affection into the work of Christ for the rescue of men. Then it becomes divine wisdom. Gifts may be but bribes for the praise of men and purchase of heaven or they may be fulcrums on a soul's sacrifice and make leverage to lift the gates of hell and lay the amethystine walls of paradise. Get the best.

This Is a Beautiful World.

What is the secret of gladness? There are many things which help to make people glad. This is a beautiful world in which we live. When the work of creation was finished, God surveyed it and saw that it was very good. We do not think enough of what God has done for our pleasure in the way that He has adorned this world preparing it to be our home. He has spread loveliness everywhere. He has covered the fields with a luxuriance of vegetation. He has sown the earth with flowers. The wonderful variety in nature—mountain and vale, lake, river and stream—gives an added charm to the marvelous beauty. Then over all this splendor God has thrown a vast vaulted roof of blue, in which, when night comes, instead of black darkness, thousands of star lamps are hung to pour their soft, quiet radiance over God's children while they sleep.—J. R. Miller, D. D., in "Secret of Gladness."

Delight In Worship.

As a rule, we believe that the souls that really want spiritual nourishment—want it enough to disregard the scoffing tone of gay society and to overcome the love of ease—find satisfaction in the worship of the churches. Even a young man's energy is limited, and if it all goes in other directions he ought hardly to expect that a minister in a single hour on Sunday should do for him what only the realization of the presence of God seven days in the week can accomplish. Worship is not merely an operation; it is a co-operation. Delight in worship grows, but it grows in active partnership with Christ. We have yet to hear of one man, young or old, who threw his energy into work with the church who did not first help in the worship of the church in spite of the shortcomings of the preachers.—Congregationalist.

Don't Grumble.

Don't be a grumbler. Some people contrive to get hold of the prickly side of everything, to run against all the sharp corners and disagreeable things. Half the strength spent in growling would often set things right. You may as well make up your mind, to begin with, that no one finds the world quite as he would like it, but you are to take your part and bear with it bravely. You will be sure to have burdens laid upon you that belong to other people unless you are a shirk yourself. But don't grumble.—Artisan.

The Cure of Loneliness.

The medicines for the cure of loneliness are portions of generosity, thoughtfulness for others and self sacrifice, taken in large doses.—Presbyterian Banner.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Christ is the source of all inspiration in art, science and life.—Rev. M. P. Smith, Catholic, San Francisco.

Coming Into God's Light.

All doubt and agnosticism with reference to God are instantly removed by coming into God's light.—Rev. W. S. Fulton, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

Safe With God's Pilotage.

All the Atlantic and Pacific oceans of surging sorrow cannot sink a soul that has asked for God's pilotage.—The Late Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage.

Truest Love and Highest Insight.

Truest love and highest insight into truth are always doing things beyond the understanding of selfish and sordid souls.—Rev. J. Standfield, Methodist, Indianapolis.

Life's Golden Key.

Love is life's key of gold. If we are ever to be admitted to its inner temple, its holiest place, this must be the key.—Rev. Dr. J. O'B. Lowry, Baptist, Kansas City, Mo.

Beginning of Reform.

Is the Christian bringing his responsibilities up to the measure of his privileges? Reform must begin with our own conduct.—Rev. D. Beaton, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Personal Interviews With Christ.

Our Lord's personal interviews with individuals as recorded in the gospel make a most interesting study and will repay our most careful consideration.—Rev. Dr. J. C. Quinn, Episcopalian, St. Louis.

An Age of Liberalism.

We have been passing through an age of liberalism when many seem to think that religion is largely a guess, that duties have been abrogated.—Rev. V. E. Tomlinson, Universalist, Worcester, Mass.

A Continual Warfare.

The conflict of the world spirit and God is analogous to the continual warfare waged between the flesh and the spirit in the person of every member of the human race.—Rev. F. W. Norris, Episcopalian, Brooklyn.

Reach For Higher Attainments.

Don't be satisfied with present attainments. Increase more and more; seek God, seek the good; reach up for the higher. Your strivings and aspirations will not be in vain.—Rev. Dr. Charles W. Byrd, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Claiming and Having.

To make the claim of possessing the spirit of Christ is not enough. If we have his spirit, we shall express his spirit. No man can be filled with the the of his Lord and manifest the spirit of the devil.—Rev. L. A. Crandall, Baptist, Chicago.

The Rock of Salvation.

The vital principle of the Christian church is that the religion is founded upon Christ, the rock of our salvation. See how the religion of Christ spreads and increases, even as the tiny mustard seed, from Christ through Andrew to Simon, and so to the world.—Rev. E. C. Moore, Congregationalist, Providence, R. I.

Need of God's Grace.

This is an age of prosperity beyond the dreams of the past. It is an age, too, that needs the grace of God and the sobering restraints of religion more than any other. All talk that religion is diffused and no longer needs the church and organized propagandism is sheer nonsense.—Rev. Mr. Philputt, Indianapolis.

Our Most Fearful Endowment.

A church without love is a churchyard; a soul without love is a corpse. This ability of love is the most fearful endowment we have. A home without love is a ghastly hypocrisy; society without love is a bleeding battleground; a loveless world would be a hell.—Rev. Dr. Reuben Thomas, Congregationalist, Boston.

Proving Love For Christ.

If we would give proof of our love for Christ, our hearts must throb with a love for our fellow men. Unless we be personal workers for souls we shall fail to fulfill our Lord's highest desire, we shall disprove our own faith, and we shall miss our largest opportunity of personal growth and gain.—Rev. Dr. John Balcom Shaw, Presbyterian, New York.

Evils Wrought by Alcohol.

Evils of drink are not of recent discovery. They are spoken of in Isaiah, but not so much was known about them then as now. Yet the mischief caused by the use of alcohol was wrought then as it is today. Some people advance the argument that no hurt arises from a little drink, but it is a false argument.—Rev. J. W. Moore, Methodist, Akron, O.

Christian's Use of Money.

Giving money is a part of man's religious life and a test of character. Money is not only the standard of value—a man also is valued by it. The world values a man by his money, and so does Christ. The world asks, How much does a man own? Christ asks, How does a man use his money? The world thinks most about money that a man gets, Christ most about money a man gives. And when a man gives the world asks, How much has he given? Christ asks, What was his motive?—Rev. Dr. John H. Prugh, Reformed Church, Pittsburg.

The Noblest Aristocracy.

To belong to the church of the carpenter of Nazareth is to be of the noblest aristocracy the earth can have. Life is of far higher meaning than just making a living. We common men need not be just earning and eating. We may be living in the truth and walking amid the inspirations that came into that life of common labor there in Nazareth. That is one thing the fellowship of the church of Christ should mean—that we partake together here in the greatest things God has.—Rev. Pearse Pinch, Congregationalist, Chicago.

"Prohibition is a failure, and saloons are essential to business prosperity," is the cry that does not cease, even in the face of cold facts. There are forty-five counties in Kansas where there is not a single pauper in the poor house, and in forty-seven counties there is not a criminal for trial. This is hard on lawyers, but it speaks volumes in favor of the extermination of this pauperizing, and crime-producing "legitimate" business.—The Michigan State Issue.

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

H. H. SEAY.

I don't believe there is any better insurance on the market than the UNION CENTRAL. I carry $10,000 with them.

VERANDA VIEWS.

In this article do not write for them. I suppose such men cannot afford to write without pay, and the papers are unable to pay. So the editors of these papers have to depend on the voluntary service of such scribblers as this writer on the veranda. But it is a pity that the Church press cannot get hold of the latent wealth of consecrated pens. I do not censure the toiling editors, for I know the embarrassment of trying to make a paper without money to pay first-class writers; but I deplore the leanness of our religious press. Chaff, chaff, chaff—whole columns of trash or twaddle. We have talent enough in Southern Methodism to make magnificent papers if we could once get hold of it. Some day we will.

S. A. STEEL.

Lumberton, Miss.

[The editor is glad to hear that the First church of Memphis has subscribed the money to pay off its debt, and has no doubt that Mr. Powell is a great master in this kind of work, but should Dr. Smart be sent to Epworth, as Dr. Steel seems to think likely, he will not have to send for Mr. Powell to raise the debt, as Epworth church subscribed $45,000 to pay its debt last Easter, and the work was planned and carried out by Rev. R. H. Bennett, then the associate pastor, now the pastor of the church.—Editor Recorder.]

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

It is well enough that some men have other men to take care of them. At Conference I was placed on none of the committees or boards, and was an interested spectator. It was well enough, for I was unwell—the only experience of the kind, except bad colds, for three years.

I was much pleased with Bishop Morrison. He is neither all official nor all divine; he is both human and humane. He is neither lord nor father; he is simply a loving and beloved brother, in Adam and in Christ. He stood like Gibraltar for an honest settlement of the Publishing House matter. He did not cringe or desert to the enemy. As he did not get what he wanted, he accepted the situation as a loyal and devoted servant of the M. E. Church, South. Like Lee, he was great in defeat. He is a fine presiding officer; quick and judicious. His humor is irrepressible, and his wit sharp as a razor. His sermon on Sunday was up to the demand.

The Rev. James Moore, son of one of our preachers, and of the Louisville Conference, preached us a sweet sermon—such as city congregations enjoy. Dr. Wadworth gave us in the Lutheran church a great sermon on Faith, Hope and Charity. Dr. Hopkins preached a sermon in the Methodist church that deserved senators, supreme judges and college professors as an audience. The half-educated and mixed audiences of most of our cities can't get up to the level of such preaching. Hopkins goes to Alabama. Surely the way of the "giraffe" is hard. But this one is a grand and good man—I mean no sarcasm by the epithet.

I am continued in the work of writing history, but they didn't get up to salary as easily this time as the first. I am under contract to squeeze in two volumes between Adam and 1844. This requires a little more time before publication. But I am at work.

I did not hear the speech of Dr. Watkins, agent of the superannuated endowment fund. He has undertaken a grand task, a noble work, a work of love. My room-mate, Dr. Kennedy was fascinated with the speech, and could not find too high terms in which to characterize it. The Church has devised liberal things, and the raising of this endowment will astound the world. Yet it can, and, I believe will, be done. Nothing is impossible with God. Nothing is impossible to faith.

On my way home I stopped a night with Dr. Waterhouse, president of E. & H. College. The college has opened better than usual. Mrs. Waterhouse did me the honor of having the professors sup with me, and sit till bedtime. They are young and progressive alumni of universities—abreast of the age. The Church ought to put down a million there; and if I could call back twenty years, I would offer my services to raise that amount. If we could get some billionaire interested, he could endow the college with the crumbs that fall from his table.

The Church must either endow or relegate the higher education to the State, and that means the spread of either skepticism or indifference.

Morristown, Tenn., October 18, 1902.

AFTER ALL.

We take our share of fretting,
Of grieving and forgetting,
The paths are often rough and steep and heedless feet may fall;
But yet the days are cheery,
And night brings rest when weary
And somehow this old planet is a good world, after all.

Though sharp may be our trouble
The joys are more than double,
The brave surpass the cowards, and the leal are like a wall
To guard their dearest ever,
To fail the feeblest never,
And somehow this old earth remains a bright world, after all.

There's always love that's caring
And shielding and forbearing,
Dear woman's love to hold us close and keep our hearts in thrall;
There's home to share together
In calm or stormy weather,
And while the heart-flame burns it is good world, after all.

The lisp of children's voices,
The chance of happy choices,
The bugle-sounds of hope and faith through fogs and mists that call
The heaven that stretches o'er us
The better days before us,
They all combine to make this earth
good world, after all.

Religious News.

Evangelistic meetings are still in progress at Trinity M. E. church, South. The powerful preaching of Evangelist Bransford is stirring the people, and there have been several conversions. The congregations are large. Deep interest continues to be manifested.—News.

Invitations have reached this city announcing the fact that Rev. Samuel Jackson Batten better known as Jack Batten, to his old friends here, will on Wednesday, October 29th, take unto himself a wife. The lady is Miss Sallie Reed, daughter of Rev. J. C. Reed, a Methodist minister in Danville, Va.

The many friends of Jack in this city, his old home, wish him well, and that he may have a long and prosperous life of usefulness.—Pilot.

The revival meeting at Drummond-town M. E. church, South, which began about ten days ago, has been attended with great success, twenty-four persons having been converted up to time of going to press. Rev. R. T. Waterfield having been called home Wednesday by the sickness of one of his children the preaching is now being done by the pastor, Rev. N. R. Hartness. If the interest in the meeting continues services may be expected every night next week.

Rev. John G. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides Islands, has written to Dr. Crafts, of the reform bureau at Washington, a letter overflowing with joy and thanksgiving for the passage by Congress of the bill prohibiting the sale of liquor to the natives in the South Seas. He says: "When put in force it will prevent many murders and much sin and misery among our 40,000 to 60,000 cannibals yet in the New Hebrides."

Last year General von Hoessler, commanding at Metz, forbade the sale of alcoholic liquors to soldiers in any military canteen, or in any inn or tavern frequented by soldiers throughout the entire extent of his command. As a result the men became stronger and capable of enduring greater strain. So marked was the good effect that General Hervarth von Bittenfeld, commanding at Saverne, has issued similar orders to all inn-keepers and liquor dealers within the limits of his command. The restriction applies to brandy and all spirituous liquors.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Carson died this morning, aged 70 years, at the home of his son, Dr. Chaplin H. Carson, in this city. Dr. Carson was able to be about the city yesterday, and his sudden death was a great shock to the community.

He was one of the best known ministers in the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, having been a minister for forty-nine years, taking his first charge in Baltimore.

He was for four years pastor of Greene Memorial, this city, afterwards going to Vinton. He was superannuated by the last session of the Baltimore Conference. He leaves a widow and six children—Mrs. E. C. Wilcox, Baltimore; Mrs. Hugh C. Penn, Roanoke; Mrs. F. W. Thomas, Topeka, Kan.; Miss Julia Carson, Roanoke; Dr. Chaplin H. and Thomas E. Carson, Roanoke.

Rev. A. C. Jordan commenced a protracted meeting in the Methodist church here on Monday. Rev. A. W. Dunkley, of Richmond, is assisting him. There will be two sermons daily, morning and night.—Amelia.

Revival services will begin at Kenwood Methodist church the first Sunday in next month, and will be conducted by Rev. Mr. Hunter, of Ashland. These services will be conducted only at night, and if the weather is favorable they will be largely attended.

There was preaching at the Methodist church here Sunday by Rev. Mr. Lipscomb, who delivered an able discourse before a large congregation.—Dispatch Correspondence, Elmont.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, auxiliary to the Virginia Methodist Conference, will meet to-night in Broad Street Methodist church.

The meeting will be conducted by Mrs. H. C. Cheatham.

A hundred and twenty-five delegates are expected, and a large number of visitors, who will be entertained while here in various Methodist homes. Mrs. Ivey, of Lynchburg, is president. The opening sermon will be preached Wednesday evening by the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, and the body will remain in session three days, holding meetings morning and night.—Times.

The following communication from Bishop A. Coke Smith, in response to resolutions that were lately issued by the preachers' meeting, regretting his removal to another city and expressing the wish that he might finally have the opportunity to make his permanent home here, was read by the secretary and received:

Willoughby Beach, Va.

October 4, 1902.

Rev. J. K. Joliff:

My Dear Brother,—I am in receipt of your favor of September 29th ult., conveying to me resolutions passed by the Norfolk Preachers' meeting. Please express to my brethren my appreciation of their thoughtfulness and their great kindness. I shall ever cherish among my sweetest memories the recollections of my delightful intercourse with them; and wherever I may be it will be a pleasure to have any one of them under my roof tree. Praying God's blessing on you and on each member of the Preachers' Meeting. I am,

Yours affectionately,

A. COKE SMITH.

The Methodist Ministerial Association of Williamsport, Pa., has posted cards bearing Scripture texts on the liquor question in the street cars of that city. In one of the cars, fitted in between two hotel advertisements, is a card bearing the words, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." In the same car are the advertisements of three hotels and three kinds of beer and whiskey, with another kind of beer advertised outside. In another car are the words, "Wine—at last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." In this car were the advertisements of five hotels and brands of whiskey and beer. In still another was the warning, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him, and maketh him drunk also." In this car were five advertisements of the drink referred to.

METHODIST BRIEFS.

Rev. C. D. Crawley, of Mathews, Va., a former pastor of Union Station Methodist church, is slowly recovering from a severe illness of typhoid malaria.

Rev. L. W. Guyer, an old Richmond boy, is closing up his fourth years' pastorate at West Street Methodist church, in Petersburg, with eminent success. Every department of the church has been built up, and, according to the law of the Church, Mr. Guyer will be transferred to another field.—News.

Rev. G. T. D. Collins, of the Baltimore Conference, who is assisting the Rev. Dr. Hannon at Union Station Methodist church in a series of meetings, has met with much success. There has been thirty conversions, and the church greatly strengthened.

The members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Virginia Conference in this city are making extensive preparations for the reception of the delegates to the twenty-fourth annual meeting, which will convene in Centenary Methodist church on next Tuesday evening, October 21st, to last three days. Dinner will be served by the respective churches in the city at Centenary each day during the meeting. Laurel Street church will furnish lunch on the first day.—News.

PROF. ARNOLD'S ADDRESS.

On Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock Professor Arnold, of the Woman's College, gave a very fine address on the subject, "The Life that is Hid with God." Seldom has a speaker with more earnestness and interest spoken to this meeting. Dr. Arnold's address was full of food for thought, aptly illustrated, and teeming with beautiful and appropriate Scripture quotations. A series of talks are being arranged on the "Sins of Lynchburg, or the Traps Set for Young Men," which it is hoped will begin next Sunday at 3:30 o'clock.—News.

DR. MORRISON COMING.

Rev. Henry Clay Morrison, the noted Western preacher, is expected here tomorrow. There will be a preliminary service of the choirs and workers at Trinity church to-morrow night. Professor Mitchell will be present. A large platform to seat fifty singers has been erected in the church. The first sermon will be preached by Dr. Morrison on Wednesday night. It will be in the interest of the submerged portion of a city's people. Rev. George Wiley is at the head of this work here for a wide locality and the committee of business men in charge of the Mission Institute has issued several hundred invitation to the laymen of the city inviting them to be present.

It is not going too far to say that Dr.

Morrison is one of the most attractive speakers in this country. Like so many of this day he does not hesitate to make people laugh; he is just as sure to make them cry as to laugh. Dr. Spooner and the church of which he is pastor cordially invite all denominations to join with them in the work. Preaching service each day at 11 o'clock and 8 P. M.—Leader.

LARGE CONGREGATIONS HEARS SERMON ON "A WOMAN'S RIGHTS."

About 900 people heard Rev. George E. Booker's sermon on "A Woman's Rights" at High Street M. E. church last night. Some time before the hour of service the large and spacious edifice was comfortably filled, and by 8 o'clock it was necessary to bring in all the chairs from the Sunday school room. The congregation was a representative one, being composed of different sects and communities. The subject discussed was no doubt treated in a different manner from which many had expected.

In the beginning of his sermon Mr. Booker assured the audience that it was not his intention to discuss "Woman's Rights" in the ordinary acceptation of the phrase, but to mention some of the real rights of women. The sermon was listened to with the closest attention, and many striking and helpful truths were impressively taught. The sermon next Sunday night on "A Woman's Choice of a Companion in Life," will conclude the attractive and popular series.—Progress.

EVANGELIST STUART'S MEETINGS

Immense congregations attended the meetings of the Methodist evangelist, Rev. George R. Stuart, Sunday morning and night, at Epworth church, and the greatest interest was manifested at all these services.

Mr. Stuart is an interesting and forcible speaker, clear in his illustrations, and never fails to score a point. He denounces sin in all its forms in unmeasured terms, and holds up to his hearers the beauties of a pure, Christian life in a manner that reaches his audiences and leaves an indelible impression upon them for good.

Mr. Stuart will hold two meetings a day throughout the week, one at noon and the other at 8 o'clock P. M. The night sermon will be preceded by a thirty minute song service.—Pilot.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM BISHOP A. COKE SMITH.

Among a number of other letters with regard to a new building for the Lynchburg Association, written Mr. T. M. Terry, the following from Bishop Smith is very gratifying to those interested in this much needed improvement in this city:

Willoughby Beach, Va.,

July 25, 1902.

Mr. T. M. Terry, Lynchburg, Va.:

My Dear Sir,—I learn that the directors are desirous of having a new building for the Y. M. C. A. in Lynchburg. I wish you God-speed in such an undertaking. No better association is to be found among all those with whose work I am acquainted than that

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presby-
terian Church, Chicago

Chicago. Friendly counsel to both parties in the unhappy labor war, to be in the mining regions is of this sermon on the text Luke x, 27, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

A startling telegram was lying upon my desk as I sat down to write this sermon. It was direct information, sent to one of the Chicago newspapers, and it read: "Fifty thousand employees of Pittsburgh's mills and factories face loss of work through a famine in fuel as a result of the prolonged miners' strike. Coal and coke stacks are nearly exhausted. It is asserted that some of the largest plants will be forced to close in a few days."

Terrible is the suffering which is being caused in the little towns and villages where the Pennsylvania miners live. A lady who just left the village of Shickshinny, which is situated in the heart of the coal region, told me that there the men and the women and the children were practically starving. Even the dogs, gaunt and haggard, were running through the streets like famished wolves. More serious to the national welfare is it to think that hundreds of thousands and even millions of men, women and children all over the east are being indirectly affected on account of this miners' strike in addition to those who directly earn their daily wages in the mines.

But the social disturbances attending the Pennsylvania strike of 1902 are no worse than the Pullman strike of 1894, when the troops had to be ordered out and the fire bells ceased ringing lest they should summon together a crowd of starving men and women. Then President Cleveland sent the United States troops to clear the tracks for the mails, and the Gatling guns were unlimbered and made ready to "shoot to kill." The present disturbance is no worse than the famous Homestead strike of 1892, when the Pinkerton men guarded the works night and day and when H. C. Frick, the superintendent, was nearly murdered, and the strike of this year and those of 1894 and 1892 are as mere bagatelles compared to the awful railroad strike of 1878, when every great city—north, east and west—was terrorized and when human blood was being daily shed.

Capital and Labor.

The troubles between capital and labor on account of the strike are no worse here than in foreign lands. John Burns, the labor leader and a member of the present British parliament, told me that during the famous London dock strikes of a few years ago the men under his leadership were so pressed by hunger that at times they became almost uncontrollable. It was only by the most level headed leadership that anarchy and riot were averted. One day he saw a large crowd of strikers assembled together. There were murmurings and curses uttered upon every side. He heard an anarchist in a nearby wagon pleading with the strikers to end their hunger by the force and the murderer's weapon. Then John Burns, the labor leader, cried out in a loud voice: "Stand back, men! and let me pass." The next second three John Burns passed through the opened lines until he came to the wagon and climbed up. Then he turned and said: "Men, you know I am your friend. You know my wife and children and myself are suffering hardship, just as you are. But, men, if you will hold out a little longer in this strike you will surely win—not, however, in the way my anarchistic friend wants you to hold out. He says for you to use the anarchist's torch and the murderer's dagger; he says to use that means which will surely tie the hangman's noose about your neck and turn the artilleryman's guns upon your homes. Is he willing to do what he wants us to do?" With that John Burns took a daily newspaper out of his pocket, twisted it up as a torch, struck a match and lighted it. Then he turned to the anarchist and said, "Now, friend, take that torch and burn yonder building if you dare." The man's face became as white as death. "Then," said John Burns, "I lifted my fist and knocked him down as a butcher might fell an ox. With my foot I thrust him out of that wagon as though he were a mad dog, frothing at the mouth, trying to bite my heel."

Strikes among the bricklayers, strikes among the freight men, strikes among the builders, strikes among the sewing girls, strikes up and down this land in every direction. Strikes in times of financial prosperity. Strikes in times of panic. What are the causes of all these strikes? The object of this sermon is to try to adduce some reasons for the labor agitations, present and past, and to show capital and labor that each has selfishly erred and sinned. My object is also to show that if the employers, as well as the employees, would equally live by the Golden Rule and love their neighbors as themselves an era of national as well as individual prosperity, both financial and spiritual, would result such as the world has never seen.

Changed Social Conditions.

Capital has sinned and helped to cause the present social agitation because it has ceased to make the laborers' interest its own interest. The present social conditions prevailing between capital and labor could not have existed fifty or a hundred years ago. In olden times the employer associated with his employees. The small factory towns of England nearly always had the manufacturer's homestead within a stone's throw of the men and women who worked in his factory. The result was that if a workman had sickness in his family he could go to his employer and get financial help. If he was in trouble and did not know what to do, he could go to his employer and get advice. If he was an honest, energetic employee, he could always feel that his employer's eye was upon him and that he would be deservedly rewarded. And if he did wrong the workman also knew that his employer's eye was upon him and that he would suffer accordingly. The result was that the manufacturer's mansion and the mechanic's cottage were in such close touch that the owners looked upon each other as brothers and members of a large family, in which the employer was the elder brother, or head of the house.

Employer and employee in olden times used to live together in a community in the same confidential relationship that Andrew Jackson held toward the people of his plantation. One night at evening prayers the wife of his overseer happened to enter the room. Mrs. Jackson beckoned to her to come and sit by her side. An important national official, visiting there at the time, turned to one of the friends and asked, "You Mrs. Jackson treat all her employees as confidentially as that?" "Yes," answered the friend, "and if Mrs. Jackson had not done as she did the general would have arisen and given to the woman his own chair."

But though the relations in olden times between the employer and the employee may have been very friendly and fraternal, I do not believe that the heart of the capitalist today is naturally any less kind and loving and helpful than that of his predecessor. I believe that most of the trouble between the employer and the employee is directly attributable not, as many suppose, to the capitalist's hardness of heart, but to the infinite misfortune that now the employer rarely if ever comes in direct touch with his employee.

By the time the capitalist's money, which he gives for labor, reaches the employee the money as well as all the sweets that ought naturally to come as a result of that labor is scattered right and left. The superintendent who can run the mill or foundry at the lowest cost gets the biggest salary. The big officers of the trusts get their millions. The little men, who do the hard work, receive pittance which are hardly enough to allow them to eke out a bare physical existence. The capitalist ought to see that the money he pays for labor reaches the men who work and that it is not lost on the way to their pockets.

Prosperity Must Be Shared.

Men and women of the capitalistic class, these labor agitations and troubles will never be settled until you are willing to share your prosperity with those who are working for you so faithfully to make a living. The labor troubles will never be settled until a man willing to work can earn enough money not only to care for his children while he is alive, but to fit them for becoming self supporting after he is dead.

Hunger is demoralizing; it is maddening when it is witnessed driving its fangs into those a man loves. Howsoever honest a man may be, his principles are in danger of failing if his wife and children through no fault of his are starving. I heard of one case that must be typical of the impulses of many who are controlling them with difficulty. It occurred a few years ago, when the silver mines of the west were closed down. A man walked into the village store and drew a pistol. Then he flung a bag of flour across his shoulder as he pointed his revolver at the men, saying: "When I could find work, I was always willing to work, and then I paid my bills. But now I cannot find work, and my babies are starving. I am going to get them something to eat. I am going to take this flour home. If any man tries to stop me, I will put a hole through his heart." That may be anarchy, but that will be the anarchy this country will have to face if the time ever comes when the laboring classes cannot earn enough to buy their daily bread. The world does not owe a lazy, good for nothing loafer any lodgings better than the poorhouse or the county jail when he is alive or any burial place better than a grave in the potter's field when he is dead, but the world does owe every honest, faithful man who is willing to work the opportunity to work, and, furthermore, capital does owe this to its employees—when the good times come and capital prospers then wages should be increased and labor should prosper also.

"Now," answers some capitalist, "you are advocating a lot of high sounding nonsense. You are practically saying that every capitalist should become a philanthropist. He should turn his business into a co-operative concern and let his employees share as much as possible in his wealth. It does not go in business. Religion, business, like oil and water, do not mix. Business is not run upon the principle of the Golden Rule, but upon the law of supply and demand. Hire where we can hire the cheap, so we can manufacture the cheap. We sell where we can sell the dear. We make all the money we can. If we want to be philanthropists, if we want to be business men, we give away as much as we please."

Mix Gospel With Business.

My capitalistic friend, your statements are wrong. The gospel and business do financially mix well. The capitalist who practices the Golden Rule in business and lets his employees share in his prosperity will "win out" every time. What was the history of George W. Childs? There never was a man who received happier financial results from practicing the Golden Rule than did he. When Mr. Childs, a young man, took hold of the Philadelphia Ledger, it was a financial failure. All employees of that concern were placed upon the lowest possible wages. The trusted men were deserting at every possible chance and finding other places. What did George W. Childs do? He gathered his new employees about him and practically said: "Men, I cannot pay you much in the beginning, but I promise you one thing—I prosper you shall prosper. Furthermore, when any of you become disabled by advancing years from work, I will pension you for life, so that you can live in ease and support your children. If you will be true to me, I will be true to you. We shall go up together or go down together. I will consider the Ledger staff a big family and as far as possible I shall find new future head men from those who are now working in the ranks."

Did the Golden Rule mean a failure in George W. Childs' life? As soon as the new employees heard the ringing words of their chief they went to work with a will. The subscription list in the Philadelphia Ledger doubled and trebled and quadrupled. Why? Because when George W. Childs prospered the employees knew that they would prosper also. Because of their own prosperity as well as of his they worked as they never worked before. Those employees made thousands of dollars for themselves. They made millions upon millions of dollars for Mr. Childs. The magnificent result from practicing the Golden Rule in the Philadelphia Ledger can be duplicated in every other big business corporation in any part of the world.

But the trouble with most capitalists of the present day is that they refuse to do as Mr. Childs did. They shirk their individual responsibility. As your moneys are collected into a great trust or corporation and you only hold a few shares you say you are not responsible for what the whole concern may do. You are like the members of an execution squad who have been detailed to shoot a spy caught within the military lines. You say no one individual is responsible for the execution, because twenty-five bullets instead of one strike the doomed man's heart, but every capitalist who has his money invested in a corporation where starvation salaries are being paid to its employees is responsible for the damage that his money helps to do. He is responsible if child labor be engaged in his factory. He is responsible if men and women, on account of his indifference, go to their mental and physical and perhaps spiritual doom. He is his brother's keeper in so far as that he

We have received the first numbers of "The Issue," an eight page weekly journal devoted to the interest of law enforcement and civic reform, edited by Rev. E. E. Barclay, Ph. D., until recently Superintendent of the Missouri Anti-Saloon League, now Superintendent of the St. Louis Law Enforcement League. The paper is well calculated to be a power in the interest of civic righteousness in St. Louis and Missouri. Dr. Barclay is so proud of his paper that we note he has placed his picture on the front cover page of the third number. Long live The Issue.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

My own boys were greatly benefited by the Y. M. C. A. work while we lived in Lynchburg. None but God knows how much good it has done, and with better facilities, larger and better rooms, baths, library, etc. its influence will be greatly increased.

TALK TO EIGHT HUNDRED MEN.

About 800 men, representing the various walks in life, attended the tenth anniversary of the Union Mission at the Academy of Music Sunday afternoon. The special feature of the meeting was the announcement that the Rev. George R. Stuart, who is conducting a series of ten days' meetings at Epworth Methodist church, would deliver the address.

Rev. J. Hall, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, presided, and Mr. Geo. R. Proctor conducted the singing, and the opening prayer was made by Rev. W. A. Barr, St. Luke's Episcopal church. Mr. W. G. Ashley, superintendent of the mission, read his report of the year's work of the institution, which was a most gratifying exhibit.

Dr. Hall introduced Mr. Stuart in highly eulogistic remarks, who spoke for one hour, taking as the central thought in his address the purpose of Daniel in moulding a character that has made his name an honor to the Christian world in all ages. The address was characteristic of the speaker, replete with sound and wholesome advice. His illustrations were very practical, many points being adduced that were received with the greatest applause by his audience. His appeal to the young men never to do anything to wound the hearts and crush the lives of their mothers was pathetic in the extreme, and brought tears to the eyes of many of his hearers.

A collection was taken up, after which the hymn, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," was sung, and the audience dismissed with the benediction by Rev. E. T. Dadmun.—Pilot.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

The Methodist preachers held their regular weekly meeting at 10:30 A. M. yesterday morning and was called to order by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor.

Prayer was made by the Rev. W. H. Riddick, preacher in charge of the Princess Anne Circuit.

Among the visitors present were the Rev. George R. Stuart, the noted Methodist evangelist, and Rev. J. B. Wellons, of the Christian Church. They were received with the usual ministerial courtesies.

Mr. Stuart, in response to an invitation, made a brief talk, taking as the basis of his remarks "Love," the central thought being that out of true love, which is the essence of all true Christianity, emanates all those virtues that adorn the ideal Christian character. He said his special mission in Norfolk is in the interest of the Methodist Church that she may be clothed with spiritual power from on high, and he desired that the ministers attend the meetings and aid in making them means of bringing about a Pentecostal season among all the churches. In doing this they will be strengthened and nerved for a greater work in the Master's toil.

Rev. Mr. Wellons said he esteemed it a pleasure to be with his Methodist brethren, and said that he was not in the regular pastorate now, having given up after an active service of 48 years.

REPORT OF THE CHURCHES.

Rev. J. B. Merritt reported a good day at the Seamen's Bethel and profitable services.

At Owen's Memorial, Rev. Ernest Stevens had good congregations and interesting services. In the afternoon he attended the installation of Rev. Dr. A. E. Owens at the South Street Baptist church, Portsmouth.

At Cumberland Street church there was a grand rally of the Sunday school, which was largely attended, and the exercises very interesting. The pastor, Rev. C. L. Bane, preached at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. to large congregations, and received one new member by certificate.

Rev. C. W. Cain attended services at Pythian Castle Hall, Portsmouth, Sunday morning and heard a fine sermon by Bishop Fitzgerald, of the M. E. Church. In the afternoon he attended the meeting at the Academy and heard Rev. George R. Stuart speak to men only. At night he attended the service at Epworth church, and again heard Mr. Stuart.

Rev. D. B. Austin had a full day Sunday. He preached at Haygood Memorial at 11 A. M., at Little Neck church at 3 P. M. and at Lynnhaven station at night.

Rev. E. K. Odell conducted children's day services at Huntersville church at 11 A. M. Sunday and baptized three infants. He preached at night to a large congregation and received two members on profession of faith.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt taught a class in the Sunday school at Port Norfolk and preached at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M., and received five on profession of faith. A revival is now in progress, with good results, there having been ten conversions already.

Rev. W. P. Jordan reported a good Sunday school at Park Place.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth held his usual services at LeKies' Memorial with increased congregations.

Rev. George Wesley Jones received one member on profession of faith and had large congregations to hear him at Trinity church.

Rev. W. R. Crowder had a good day at Denby's church, Norfolk county. He had three accessions to the Sunday school, and received one member on profession of faith.

Rev. Dr. John Howard, of the Methodist Church, preached at Wright Memorial Sunday morning, and the pastor, Rev. George H. McFaden, preached at night. There were large congregations at both services.

Rev. W. H. Riddick had a pleasant day on the Princess Anne circuit.

Rev. R. N. Smith preached at Oaklette Sunday morning and at Bethel at night. He is conducting revival meetings at the latter church, with prospects of good success.

Rev. D. W. Moore, a member of the American Christian Convention, preached at the Christian Memorial Sunday morning and night. An interesting missionary meeting was held at the church in the afternoon. Dr. Barrett preached at Providence church at 3 P. M.

Rev. D. J. Traynham preached at Beach Grove Sunday morning and at Joliffs in the afternoon.

Rev. J. K. Joliff preached at Queen Street church morning and night Sunday, and had profitable services. Mr. Joliff assisted the Rev. T. J. Taylor in a revival meeting at Crewe, Va., last week. He reported an interesting meeting and several conversions.

At Lambert's Point Rev. C. H. McGhee had a good Sunday school and preached to good congregations morning and night. He received four members by certificate and organized a Junior Epworth League in the afternoon.

Rev. R. H. Bennett reported three excellent sermons at Epworth church last week by local Methodist preachers. He heard Rev. George R. Stuart at the Academy and also morning and night at Epworth, where he held forth to overflowing congregations.

Rev. W. R. Proctor had large congregations to hear him at McKendree church Sunday. He received one member on profession of faith and eleven by certificate.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings had the usual congregation to hear him Sunday at Monumental church. In the afternoon he attended the installation of Rev. Dr. Owen at South Street Baptist church.

At Park View Rev. J. N. Latham reported a large increase in the Sunday school. He preached to fine congregations at the regular services and received three members by certificate.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun reported the usual services at Centenary church and fair congregations.

A letter was read by the secretary from Bishop A. Coke Smith, expressing his appreciation of the thoughtfulness and kindness of the brethren for him, saying that he should cherish among his sweetest memories the record of his delightful Christian and social intercourse with them, and that he will be pleased at any time to have them under his roof tree.

The meeting closed with special prayer by Rev. E. T. Dadmun for the success of Mr. Stuart's meetings.—Virginia-Pilot.

HOW TO DO GOOD.

(By the Editor of Charlotte Gazette.) There are people so good they have nothing to do

But to growl that the world is no better;

For all but themselves, in their sanctified view,

Are bound by some soul-smirching fetter.

They see people who drink, and people who dance,

And people who slander each other

But how many there are who do worse on the sly,

These "unco guid" folk can't discover.

But of one thing be sure; where a fellow you find

Who has nothing to do but to grumble:

To his own little faults he's completely blind,

But is quick to observe when you stumble.

The chances are good, nine times out of ten,

That his skill in his vaunted profession,

Detective like, comes from his knowledge of men,

And the faults he has in possession

Didst e'er know a farmer to harvest but weeds,

Who follows the plow of his neighbor?

Don't you find, as a rule, he most surely succeeds

Who gives his own farm all his labor?

If you wish to do good, let each action declare

To yourself your faithful duty;

Let the path that you tread shed a brightness so fair

It shall win by the force of its beauty.

If you wish to do good, beware all pretence,

Don't brag of immaculate goodness;

Worse vices than those you may think an offence,

May prove all your virtue but rudeness.

Nay, would you do good, you'll find plenty to do

In seeing the ills of your own;

Your own needy heart has some claims upon you,

Your neighbor's you'd best let alone.

How much better this world, in all senses, would be

Should each act on this excellent plan;

From pride, greed and envy each bosom made free,

While each does as well as he can.

Satanism dies hard. What will not men do for money? They work for it, suffer for it, starve for it, lose sleep for it, scheme for it, cheat for it, lie for it, prevaricate for it, steal for it, rob for it, fight for it, kill for it, die for it, go to hell for it.—Southern Methodist Recorder.

HOW TO BE A CHRISTIAN.

(By the Editor of Charlotte Gazette.)
The following lines were addressed to one who asked, "How can I become a Christian?"

thou would'st be a Christian, thou must strive to tread the narrow path the Master bids thee;
to be a Christian is to follow Him;
take up thy daily cross and bear it on.
any thyself of every lust and pride.
an's strongest foes are those which lurk within,
and spring, unlooked for, from an erring heart.
no outward forms can change the current of a sinful mind. God's inward grace alone,
teaching principles of truth, and love and charity,
can mould the nature and reform the soul
after a pattern such as God approves.
no make us Christ-like, we must follow Him.
no guile was in His mouth. He never sought any trick, imposture, or by cunning craft,
no circumvent His fellows; selfish ends he never followed; to get gain and trade, and make His own advantage uppermost was not His plan. A gentle charity controlled His life. Unselfish still, he lived and labored for His fellow's good,
this is the law He gave; that thou should'st love thy God with all thy heart, and as thyself
thy neighbor; in His steps to tread, or seek to scatter blessing all along thy path, to make the world the brighter for thy presence, and to find thy daily happiness in doing good.
With loving words and acts to soothe the grief of sorrowing hearts; to win earth's wandering ones from devious paths of wretchedness and sin,
to find sweet resting in the Father's house.
Thou need'st not go on lengthened mission to some foreign land to find occasion for thy Christly work, the field is at thy doors;
Thou can'st begin at home. Thine own poor heart
may need the culture of more grace divine.
Thou can'st enlarge the limits of thy soul
in gentler feeling for thine own—for those who need thy sympathy and cares;
with strong and ready purpose to discharge more faithfully thy daily task. By so much shall the world be better made, as thou thyself shalt gain in likeness to the Master. Then, as grace
may shine reflected in thy loving life,

Its light may fall upon another's path,
And point the way to happiness and peace.
With thine own heart enriched with inward grace,
Thou'll find enough to do, around thee spread;
The field invites thee to thy Christian work.
The labors of some other thou may'st share,
Without fault-finding that he does no more,
Or not as thou would'st have him.
Every heart
Its own peculiar betterness may know,
And not in harshness, but in gentle
love
Just like the Master, thou may'st make thy life
So Christian that the world shall better be Because thou livest in it!
What 'tis to be a Christian? would'st thou know?
Follow Him,
Who is the only pattern, measure not Yourself with erring mortals; seek His aid
Who knows our human weakness, or whose grace Alone can make us strong to do the work
He gives us, and can crown it all with life
Unending in immortal skies.

The record of crime which is traceable to the open saloon marks a crimson swath throughout the world. But we are so accustomed to the reading in each morning's paper of the shocking headlines of tragedy after tragedy where human lives have paid the forfeit to appetite, that we are apt to be indifferent toward the institution itself which is responsible for this awful slaughter. It is only when the total
sively before our eyes that we pause and ponder. It startles us when so conservative paper as the Chicago Tribune, and one which has so little in sympathy with anti-saloon efforts, charges that the saloons of the United States are responsible for over 53,000 murders which have been committed in this country during the last ten years. These figures are based upon the record carefully kept by the statistical editor and carry the authority almost of a government report, and we do not doubt they are far more accurate. If true, they mean that the American saloon claims more victims every decade than were laid on the altar of liberty during the last and bloodiest year of the civil war. And this record takes account only of murders. It says nothing of assault and arson and adultery and theft and the thousand and one crimes which flow direct and indirect from the charnal house of Rum.

Is there no relief?—Ram's Horn.

Our esteemed contemporary, the No License Advocate, of Danville, has put in its appearance again, as brisk as ever, after a two months' summer vacation. We do not know what effect a summer vacation would have on The Christian Federation, not having seen any opportunity to try it.

A TEMPERANCE TOWN.

"Now that we've signed the pledge,"
said Dimple to Dot,
"Not to use alcohol and tobacco, why not Ask our dollies that live in Dollikinville
To sign the pledge, too? I am sure that they will."

"They have not touched tobacco nor tasted strong drink,
It is true," answered Dot; "yet I certainly think That in signing the pledge is the only safe way,
For one never can tell what may happen some day."

So they sat in a row, just as straight as could be—
Isabella, Samantha and pretty Marie, Black Erastus, young Caesar Augustus,
the prig,
And old Uncle Jediah, with glasses and wig.

Then the maidens explained to each doll with much care
That 'twas harmful to drink or to smoke or to swear,
And they told how important it was that folks should Take the pledge and then keep it if they would be good.

When the pledges were brought, every doll wrote its name,
While the girls held their hands (which, of course, was the same);
For the dollies could not without help
write a word,
But most willingly signed; no objection was heard.

Then said Dimple, "I hope that this promise you make
You will ne'er be so foolish, so false, as to break."
And they've all kept their word and I'm sure always will,
And a temperance town is this Dolli-kinville.

—Agnes E. Valentine, in Union Signal.

A STUMP PULLING.

Rev. George Stuart, the evangelist, has been holding a series of meetings in Broad Street M. E. church, this city.
He has drawn great crowds to hear him, not only at the night meetings, but at the noon hour. There can be no doubt that great and lasting good has been done by his plain, practical, uncompromising preaching.

Sunday, September 28th, at 3:30 P.
M., he delivered a temperance address to men in the Academy of Music. Long before the hour of service the great auditorium was filled to its capacity, hundreds of men were besieging the closed doors, and hundreds more were returning to their homes.

Mr. Stuart had announced the meeting as a "stump pulling." If any antiquated notions that the saloon is a useful, necessary and respectable institution were lingering in the minds of any that heard him, said notions ought to have been thoroughly eradicated by his conclusive and forceful logic. As a sample of this take his demonstration of the truth of his statement that "A saloon keeper is worse than a robber."

Turning to a pastor sitting near him on the stage, he asked: "Have you a son?"

"Yes, sir."

"Which had you rather find in his pocket, nothing or a bottle of whiskey?"

"Nothing," was the emphatic answer.

"Well the robber takes his money and leaves him with nothing in his pocket. The saloon keeper takes his money and leaves him with a bottle of whiskey in his pocket. Which is worse?"

The discourse throughout was a powerful setting forth of Anti-Saloon League doctrine, and made an impression which will doubtless greatly strengthen our work in this city, though the speaker was not in the employ of the League. We propose to follow up the advantage gained with earnest work, and trust that all our members and friends in Richmond will most heartily co-operate. Let us strike while the iron is hot.

***

At the Giles County Anti-Saloon League Convention, held the 15th of August, it was decided that the next Convention should be held at Eggleston Springs, Thursday, August 22, 1903.
Some people in the county misunderstood the date, and were making preparations to attend the next Convention at Eggleston Springs August 22, 1902, and actually would have gone had not Field Secretary West learned of their mistake in time to send them more correct information. These Giles county people must certainly be interested in the Anti-Saloon League work to want to attend two Conventions just a week apart.

bound to see that the man whose toll adds to his wealth has fair wages.

Cause of Social Upheaval.

But the laboring classes as well as the capitalists have sinned and helped to cause the present social upheaval. The employee is not any more a saint than his employer. They both at times seem to be tarred with the same black stick. Yet the average laboring man pretends to think that all the cause for the present social upheaval is to be laid at the rich man's door and not at his own. In his own blind egotism he seems to be almost as contented with himself and his actions as was the old Quaker, grumbling against the peculiarities of the human race, when he said to his wife, "All the world is queer except me and thee, Mary, and thou art a little queer."

Do the laboring classes always make their employer's interest their own interest? Oh, no. There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of them who show little, if any, sense of moral responsibility. When engaging their services to a man, they do not for one instant stop to consider the money which that employer has invested in his plant. They do not stop to think of the financial risk he is running, of the seven years of financial depression which may come to him when he may have to run his works at a practical dead loss, as when the seven years of famine came to Joseph in the land of Egypt. They do not seem to realize that when they shirk their work they are stealing their employer's money, for time means money.

The different labor associations, like the Bricklayers' union, the Stone Cutters', the Carpenters and Builders', the Steam Fitters', Gas Fitters' and Plumbers' unions, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Firemen, Brakemen and Conductors, all have their beneficent mission. They ought to benefit capital as well as labor. They ought to be the means of putting through the different state legislatures laws to prevent the employment of children, to limit the hours of labor and to prevent flagrant injustices against their members. But the work of the modern labor union does not stop there. It often goes to the capitalist and tries to dictate what men he shall or shall not employ. It goes to the capitalists and says: "You must look upon every one of our members as an equal and pay all alike. You must pay just as much daily wages to the ordinary worker as to the skilled worker." Or the labor union goes to the capitalist who is paying satisfactory wages and whose employees are all contented and says: "Mr. So-and-so, we have got to call your men off on a sympathetic strike. We cannot make your neighbors pay the union rate. Therefore we shall stop work until the pressure compels your neighbors to yield."

"Well," answers some walking delegate, "that is an exaggerated illustration, but uniform wages to all union workers and, when necessary, sympathetic strikes are absolutely indispensable in their way, and we are only following the example of capitalists and employers in making such combinations. We must look after the interests of the laboring man and keep our labor unions intact. It is only by the co-operation of one union, fighting for the interests of other labor unions, that the pressure is applied and our reasonable demands are granted. The laboring man cannot practice the Golden Rule of looking after the interests of his employer or else he will starve to death. The first thought the laboring man must have is for himself, and himself alone."

MUTUAL TRUST.

My laboring friend, if you cannot reach the high Christian standard of loving your employer as you would love yourself, you are simply heading toward the social economic wilderness. The greatest inspiration for future national prosperity is not to be found in the gold bricks which are stored away in the vaults of our national banks; it is in the mutual trust which the capitalist and laboring classes ought to have in each other. If the average business firm could not trust its customers or was in such condition that the wholesale business houses could not trust it, that average business house would be wrecked within thirty days. The amount of money which is in circulation today is as nothing when compared to the billions upon billions of dollars' worth of business done in America every year. I was once told by a keen, shrewd business man that at least 98 per cent of all business is done upon trust—upon the promise to pay or to do.

Now, if the capitalist cannot trust the laborer; if he feels that at any time a walking delegate might come into his establishment and command his men to cease work on account of some unreasonable demand, what does he do? Why, he naturally and wisely soliloquizes: "I cannot trust the labor market. If I should invest my money in a plant, my men may go out on a strike. Then I will be left high and dry with my property upon my hands, like a horse kept in the stable eating his head off." I will not risk my $150,000. I will buy government bonds or real estate first mortgages and take life easy." What is the result? Why, this rich man builds no factory, as he would have done, and masons, carpenters, gas fitters and the plumbers lose the contracts they would have had upon that building, and a great number of men and women who might have worked there go without steady employment. Then the commercial travelers and the merchants who would have been able to sell goods of that factory cannot sell them because the goods are not made, and the people who might have worked in those factories have earned no money with which to buy. Such evils are often a direct result of that capitalist refusing to build that one factory because of his distrust of labor. It is a wrong distrust and arises from blunders and lack of sympathy on both sides. All these evils accrue from the fact that neither the capitalist nor the laboring man will practice the Golden Rule and love his neighbor as himself.

The Dove of Peace.

As a student of social economics I have carefully studied the prevailing conditions in Chicago during the years in which I have lived in the Queen City of the West. During the last five years scores of manufacturers have left our city and have transplanted their factories into the little towns far away from the labor centers because they could not trust the laboring classes.

EVERYONE WILL APPRECIATE THIS OFFER.

By special arrangement with the Methodist Magazine Publishing Company (St. Louis, New York, and Chicago), we are enabled to offer their beautiful monthly magazine to every one of our subscribers for only 25 cents. That is to say, we will give the magazine for twelve months with every yearly subscription to this paper, new or renewal, for only 25 cents extra. Send $1.25, and we will send you for one year the Southern Methodist Recorder and the splendid pictorial monthly

THE AMERICAN
ILLUSTRATED METHODIST
MAGAZINE.

This is the only illustrated Methodist magazine published in the United States. Most of our readers have seen it; if not, write us, and a free sample copy will be sent you. The Magazine is a beautiful publication, containing not only the general literature and artistic illustrations which are characteristic of the best features of the high-class secular magazines, but it has also the distinctive literature of our Church. No other magazine so richly deserves a place in every Methodist home. It is chaste in matter, lavish in illustration, ably edited, and contains departments of interest to every member of the family, old and young.

HOW THE METHODIST MAGAZINE IS REGARDED BY THE PRESS AND BY CHURCH OFFICIALS.

"We welcome it, relish it, recommend it."
—Western Christian Advocate.
"Its aim is to advocate and magnify the things which worldwide Methodism holds in common."
—Central Christian Advocate.
"A high-grade periodical, worthy of a place in every Methodist home."
—New Orleans Christian Advocate.
"Instructive, entertaining, edifying."
—Pennsylvania Methodist.
"A vigorous religious monthly, one that should be a benediction to many homes, and an inspiration to many lives."
—Methodist Magazine and Review.
"Ought to run easily to an issue of a hundred thousand."
—Richmond Christian Advocate.
"It ought to take the place in our Methodist homes of magazines of less religious character."
—Arkansas Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."
—St. Louis Christian Advocate.
"Worthy the great Church of which it is a literary exponent."
—St. Louis Globe-Dem.
"Takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."
—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.
"Welcomed by the whole Methodist family."
—Bishop C. C. McCabe.
"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.
"I hope every Christian will have this beautiful magazine."
—Bishop J. F. Hurst.
"It ranks with the best."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.
"It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart."
—Bishop W. A. Candler.
"A gem among the monthlies of our land."
—Prof. T. Barry Smith, Central College, Fayette, Mo.

This remarkable offer of a year's subscription to this splendid Magazine, for only 25 cents, is for prompt acceptance. It may not remain open long, and we hope that all our readers will take advantage of it at once. Send price of renewal for one year, and date of your subscription to our paper will be extended, and the American Illustrated Methodist Magazine will be sent you for twelve months. Let us hear from you at once. Don't wait. This is a great opportunity to get this beautiful pictorial monthly magazine for a whole year at a cost to you of only 25 cents. ## GRANULES.

R. N. PRICE.

In scientific experimentation, a failure is as valuable as a success.

Revenge is devilish; forgiveness is God-like.

If materialism is true, death means annihilation.

No man is perfect intellectually who is not perfect morally.

All genuine morality is founded in religion.

The three great branches of religion are theory, experience and practice, and among these there is a close interdependence.

Ideation necessarily goes before action. The idea of action tends to produce action; the idea of rest, to produce rest; the idea of sleep, to produce sleep; the idea of strength to create strength; and the idea of powerlessness, to produce powerlessness. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Our character tinges our thoughts, and our thoughts tinge our character.

Conquering the world is not going out of the world.

Self-government is the foundation of all government. Families, schools, churches, States are only well governed when their rulers are self-governed.

The great object of all governments is to teach men to govern themselves.

He that turneth the rudder turneth the ship; so he that ruleth his tongue controlleth the whole man.

A theology is false that makes God worse than man; a theology is infamous that makes Him worse than the devil.

Every infliction that is not intended to reform the offender is cruel and vindictive.

Holiness is necessarily voluntary, and eternally so. Sin is necessarily voluntary and eternally so. No man can be holy unless he could sin. No man can sin unless he could do otherwise. Sin and holiness necessarily imply moral freedom.

Acceptable service to God even in heaven must be free. Reprehensible conduct even in hell must be free. Whether the stone grinds your wheat or falls upon you and crushes you, it is equally undeserving of praise or blame.

Settle the question of immortality affirmatively, and I am willing to risk everything else; for God reigns, and under His infinitely wise and beneficent administration all shall eventually be well.

The head learns from observation, hearing and reading; the hand learns from experience and practice; but the heart learns directly from God. "The Spirit itself bearing witness."

In the school we learn how to think; in the shop, how to work; in the closet, how to live.

One hour of prayer is worth more than two hours of reading.

"Reading makes a full man; writing a correct man; conversation a ready man"; thinking a strong man; prayer a holy man; and it is better to be holy than to be full, correct, ready or strong, or all of them together.

Conscience is nothing but the moral instinct.

Faith is an instructive reliance on God.

Depravity is the paralysis of the religious instinct. Regeneration is the revival of this instinct.

Sin is abnormal; holiness is normal. Every sinner is at variance with himself; and he does not become a saint till harmony within him has been restored.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost means purification by the Holy Ghost; and this purification extends to the three natures—the intellectual, the moral, and the physical.

The filth of to-day is the food of tomorrow.

Pain is telegraphic notice served on the brain by sensation that something is going on wrong in some part of the physical system.

It is usual to change the effect by changing the cause; but it is possible in some cases to change the cause by changing the effect. By relieving pain we sometimes cure the disease. Opiates are sometimes curative as well as palliative.

Zero and infinity lie on the line between mathematical and moral reasoning.

The calculus is based on the ratio between two zeros.

The Rev. S. M. Johnson has resigned the pastorate of the Austin Presbyterian church, Chicago, in order to devote himself to the Christian Conquest Movement, and has opened headquarters at Room 212, Tacoma Building, Chicago. The Christian Conquest Movement was begun by Dr. Johnson one year ago, consequent upon the President's assassination. He designed a flag to be used by all Christian churches and organizations as a symbol of their essential unity and to rouse them with the spirit of aggression. Upon it he placed the cross and the words, "By this sign conquer," so that the flag, lifted up, would summon all to unite in instant and world-wide conquest. This flag he associated with the national flag of each country as an emblem of Christian patriotism. And the flag and the emblem were to arrest attention and give emphasis to the spirit and teaching.

Dr. Johnson's purpose is to preach a new crusade, the rallying of all Christian forces sympathetically under one flag for world-wide evangelism; and especially for the definite and practical teaching of citizenship on a Christian basis and the building up of Christian nations everywhere. He is receiving invitations to address the greatest Christian Conventions now being held. He spoke at the International Sunday School Convention in Denver last June, and secured the passage of a resolution encouraging the teaching of patriotism in connection with temperance each year on the fourth Sunday of November among 25,000,000 youth of North America. The flag and emblem were adopted by the Missouri State Sunday School Association in August, and are rapidly being adopted and used by the Sunday schools, young people's societies and churches of North America, and have spread to several foreign lands.

RELIGIOUSLY ROMANTIC.

REV. HERBERT T. BACON.

"I am religiously romantic. I am always expecting something out of the common course and planning what God is going to do." Thus wrote Dr. Edward Payson, than whom there is no man who has lived in our century of whom it might be more truly said as of Enoch, "He walked with God." I do not think that the good Doctor could have more plainly shown the strength of his faith and the liveliness of his hope than when he wrote these words; if we were in straits and an earthly friend had promised to help us, we could not show our confidence in him more plainly than by conjecturing and planning how he would do so, and securely trusting in his word, had a loving curiosity how it would be done, every hour waiting and watching for him. Payson uses the word "romantic" as meaning "out of the common order," and God's dealings with His people are full of such doings.

Abraham climbs the mountain, on whose top he is to offer up Isaac, the child of promise. Isaac, innocent and unsuspecting, is by his side. He is sure of Isaac's death by sacrifice, but thinks that God is able to raise him from the dead. (Hebrews 12: 19). It never occurs to him that he will find on the mountain a ram caught in the thicket by his horns, and he is to offer the ram in sacrifice in the place of Isaac.

He finds the ram and offers it in sacrifice; Isaac is saved; Abraham is honored for his strong faith, and God is glorified.

Unexpectedly, "romantically," God delivers him. Thank God for deliverances that are "romantic" out of the common course, and that we may expect such. Man's extremity is God's opportunity.

Surely a Scott or a Bulwer, whose pens revel in things "romantic" "out of the common course," are excelled by the accounts in God's Book of things severely simple and true.

Joseph has been falsely accused and thrown into prison. There God was with him and blessed him, for he had seen his faithfulness, who, when tempted to sin, answered, "How, then, can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" There he is put in irons, his feet hurt with fetters; there he interprets the dreams of the servants of the king, who were in the prison with him. There he waited expecting that his message to the chief butler would not be forgotten, but it was not time yet; the word of the Lord (Psalm 105: 19) had not finished its work of "trying" him. But one night the king dreams a double dream, and no one can interpret it. The chief butler recollects his own dream in the prison interpreted by a young Hebrew then in the prison, and the king hears of it. Joseph is hastily sent for, and he interprets the king's dream. Joseph is saved, unexpectedly; "romantically," he is saved; raised from a dungeon to a throne. Saved by the wisdom and power of Joseph's God.

Peter is in prison sleeping between two soldiers, bound with chains, and keepers before the door are keeping the prison. In the morning he will be delivered to his enemies. What chance is there of a rescue? Perhaps he thinks in his extremity that even grim Herod may relent. He has no thought of any other deliverance.

Suddenly a light shines in the prison, his chains fall off, the keepers know it not. Peter himself does not realize his rescue till he gets into the street. He is unexpectedly "romantically" saved.

Deliverances at times and in ways unexpectedly!

Oh, that like Payson, our faith was such that we were "religiously romantic," and expected God to do things "out of the common course," or, like Frederick Robertson, we "dealt with God at first hand."

Then Nelson straightened himself up and said:

"Well, sir, I believe a lot of the men would go in for this if they were dead sure they would get through."

"Get through!" said Craig. "Never a fear of it! It is a hard fight, a long fight, a glorious fight," throwing up his head, "but every man who squarely trusts him and takes him as Lord and Master comes out victor!"

"Bon!" said Baptiste. "Das me. You tink he's take me in dat fight, M'sieu Craig, heh?"

His eyes were blazing.

"You mean it?" asked Craig almost sternly.

"Yes, by gar!" said the little Frenchman eagerly.

"Hear what he says, then." And Craig, turning over the leaves of his Testament, read solemnly the words, "Swear not at all."

"Non! For sure! Den I stop him," replied Baptiste earnestly, and Craig wrote his name down.

Poor Abe looked amazed and distressed, rose slowly and, saying, "That jars my whisky jug," passed out.

There was a slight movement near the organ, and, glancing up, I saw Mrs. Mavor put her face hastily in her hands. The men's faces were anxious and troubled, and Nelson said in a voice that broke:

"Tell them what you told me, sir."

But Craig was troubled, too, and replied, "You tell them, Nelson!" And Nelson told the men the story of how he began just five weeks ago. The old man's voice steadied as he went on, and he grew eager as he told how he had been helped and how the world was all different and his heart seemed new. He spoke of his Friend as if he were some one that could be seen out at camp, that he knew well and met every day.

But as he tried to say how deeply he regretted that he had not known all this years before, the old, hard face began to quiver, and the steady voice wavered. Then he pulled himself together and said:

"I begin to feel sure he'll pull me through—me, the hardest man in the mountains! So don't you fear, boys. He's all right."

Then the men gave in their names one by one. When it came to Geordie's turn, he gave his name:

"George Crawford, frae the parish o' Kils, h. Scotland, an' ye'll juist pit doon the lad's name, Maister Craig. He's a wee bit fashed wi' the dis-ease, but he has the root o' the maitter in him, I doot."

And so Billy Breen's name went down.

When the meeting was over, thirty-eight names stood upon the communion roll of the Black Rock Presbyterian church, and it will ever be one of the regrets of my life that neither Graeme's name nor my own appeared on that roll. And two days after, when the cup went round on that first communion Sabbath, from Nelson to Sandy and from Sandy to Baptiste, and so on down the line to Billy Breen and Mrs. Mavor, and then to Abe, the driver, whom she had by her own mystic power lifted into hope and faith, I felt all the shame and pain of a traitor, and I believe in my heart that the fire of that pain and shame burned something of the selfish cowardice out of me and that it is burning still.

The last words of the minister, in the short address after the table had been served, were low and sweet and tender, but they were words of high courage, and before he had spoken them all the men were listening with shining eyes, and when they rose to sing the closing hymn they stood straight and stiff like soldiers on parade.

And I wished more than ever I was one of them.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE BREAKING OF THE LEAGUE.

THERE is no doubt in my mind that nature designed me for a great painter. A railway director interfered with that design of nature, as he has with many another of hers, and by the transmission of an order for mountain pieces by the dozen, together with a check so large that I feared there was some mistake, he determined me to be an illustrator and designer for railway and like publications. I do not like these people ordering "by the dozen." Why should they not consider an artist's finer feelings? Perhaps they cannot understand them, but they understand my pictures, and I understand their checks, and there we are quits. But so it came that I remained in Black Rock long enough to witness the breaking of the league.

Looking back upon the events of that night from the midst of gentle and decent surroundings, they now seem strangely unreal, but to me then they appeared only natural.

It was the Good Friday ball that wrecked the league, for the fact that the promoters of the ball determined that it should be a ball rather than a dance was taken by the league men as a concession to the new public opinion in favor of respectability created by the league. And when the manager's patronage had been secured—they failed to get Mrs. Mavor's—and it was further announced that, though held in the Black Rock hotel ballroom—indeed there was no other place—refreshments suited to the peculiar tastes of league men would be provided, it was felt to be almost a necessity that the league should approve, should indeed welcome, this concession to the public opinion in favor of respectability created by the league.

There were extreme men on both sides, of course. "Idaho Jack," professional gambler, for instance, frankly considered that the whole town was going to unmentionable depths of propriety. The organization of the league was regarded by him and by many others as a sad retrograde toward the bondage of the ancient and dying east, and that he could not get drunk when and where he pleased "Idaho," as he was called, regarded as a personal grievance.

But Idaho was never enamored of the social ways of Black Rock. He was shocked and disgusted when he discovered that a "gun" was decreed by British law to be an unnecessary adornment of a card table. The manner of his discovery must have been interesting to behold.

It is said that Idaho was industriously pursuing his avocation in Slavin's, with his gun lying upon the card table convenient to his hand, when in walked Policeman Jackson, her majesty's sole representative in the Black Rock district. Jackson—"Stonewall Jackson," or "Stonewall," as he was called for obvious reasons—after watching the game for a few moments gently tapped the pistol and asked what he used this for.

"I'll show you in two holy minutes if you don't light out," said Idaho, hardly looking up, but very angrily, for the luck was against him. But Jackson tapped upon the table and said sweetly:

"You're a stranger here. You ought to get a guidebook and post yourself. Now, the boys know I don't interfere with an innocent little game, but there is a regulation against playing it with guns; so," he added, even more sweetly, but fastening Idaho with a look from his steel gray eyes, "I'll just take charge of this," picking up the revolver. "It might go off."

Idaho's rage, great as it was, was quite swallowed up in his amazed disgust at the state of society that would permit such an outrage upon personal liberty. He was quite unable to play any more that evening, and it took several drinks all round to restore him to articulate speech. The rest of the night was spent in retailing for his instruction stories of the ways of Stonewall Jackson.

Idaho bought a new gun, but he wore it "in his clothes" and used it chiefly in the pastime of shooting out the lights or in picking off the heels from the boys' boots while a stag dance was in progress in Slavin's. But in Stonewall's presence Idaho was a most correct citizen. Stonewall he could understand and appreciate. He was 6 feet 3 and had an eye of unpleasant penetration. But this new feeling in the community for respectability he could neither understand nor endure. The league became the object of his indignant aversion and the league men of his contempt. He had many sympathizers, and frequent were the assaults upon the newly born sobriety of Billy Breen and others of the league, but Geordie's watchful care and Mrs. Mavor's steady influence, together with the loyal co-operation of the league men, kept Billy safe so far. Nixon, too, was a marked man. It may be that he carried himself with unnecessary jauntiness toward Slavin and Idaho, saluting the former with, "Awful dry weather, eh, Slavin?" and the latter with, "Hello, old sport! How's times?" causing them to swear deeply and, as it turned out, to do more than swear.

But, on the whole, the antileague men were in favor of a respectable ball, and most of the league men determined to show their appreciation of the concession of the committee to the principles of the league in the important matter of refreshments by attending in force.

Nixon would not go. However jauntily he might talk, he could not trust himself, as he said, where whisky was flowing, for it got into his nose "like a fishhook into a salmon." He was from Nova Scotia. For like reason Vernon Winton, the young Oxford fellow, would not go. When they chaffed, his lips grew a little thinner and the color deepened in his handsome face, but he went on his way. Geordie despised the "hale hypothick" as a "daft ploy," and the spending of $5 upon a ticket he considered a "sinfu" waste o' guld siller," and he warned Billy against "coontenancin' ony sic redeeklus nonsense."

But no one expected Billy to go, although in the last two months he had done wonders for his personal appearance and for his position in the social scale as well. They all knew what a fight he was making and esteemed him accordingly. How well I remember the pleased pride in his face when he told me in the afternoon of the committee's urgent request that he should join the orchestra with his cello! It was not simply that his cello was his joy and pride, but he felt it to be a recognition of his return to respectability.

I have often wondered how things combine at times to a man's destruction.

Had Mr. Craig not been away at the Landing that week, had Geordie not been on the night shift, had Mrs. Mavor not been so occupied with the care of her sick child, it may be Billy might have been saved his fall.

The anticipation of the ball stirred Black Rock and the camps with a thrill of expectant delight. Nowadays when I find myself forced to leave my quiet smoke in my studio after dinner at the call of some social engagement which I have failed to elude I groan at my hard lot, and I wonder as I look back and remember the pleasurable anticipation with which I viewed the approaching ball. But I do not wonder now any more than I did then at the eager delight of the men who for seven days in the week swung their picks up in the dark breasts of the mines or who chopped and sawed among the solitary silences of the great forests. Any break in the long and weary monotony was welcome. What mattered the cost or consequence? To the rudest and least cultured of them the sameness of the life must have been hard to bear, but what it was to men who had seen life in its most cultured and attractive forms I fail to imagine. From the mine, black and foul, to the shack, bare, cheerless and sometimes hideously repulsive, life swung in heart grinding monotony till the longing for a "big drink" or some other "big break" became too great to bear.

It was well on toward evening when Sandy's four horse team, with a load of men from the woods, came swinging round the curves of the mountain road and down the street. A gay crowd they were with their bright, brown faces and hearty voices, and in ten minutes the whole street seemed alive with lumbermen—they had a faculty of spreading themselves so. After night fell the miners came down "done up slick," for this was a great occasion, and they must be up to it. The manager appeared in evening dress, but this was voted "too giddy" by the majority.

As Graeme and I passed up to the Black Rock hotel, in the large store-room of which the ball was to be held, we met old man Nelson, looking very grave.

"Going, Nelson, aren't you?" I said. "Yes," he answered slowly. "I'll drop in, though I don't like the looks of things much."

"What's the matter, Nelson?" asked Graeme cheerily. "There's no funeral on."

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

THE NARROW WAY.

(By the Editor of Charlotte Gazette.)

Time was when passage to the gate celestial Was by a narrow way. When stripped of self,
Of pride, of malice, and the world's ambition,
The earnest seeker of eternal life must tread
A path of thorns; and, like the Master, bear
The world's derision of His straight-laced ways.
To be a Christian then required a courage
Such as martyrs made; a faith as strong
As fired the prophet when he met the priests
Of Baal, or the stern old man who offered up
His son at God's command; a love as deep
As led a Mary once to bathe with tears
Her Saviour's feet, and held her weeping
At the cruel cross, when all had fled,
Or brought her first to seek His new-made tomb.
A penitence that turned the soul from sin,
And bade the doer of a grievous wrong
Repair his error; while a loving heart,
Renewed and sanctified by love divine, Declared its love for God by serving man.
It was a narrow way; in which no
pride,
Nor envy, lust nor greed, nor haughty power,
Which worldlings covet, nor the gaudy show
Which triflers love, could gain a foothold.
No eager strife was here save that which showed
Who best could serve his fellow and his God,
No velvet carpet for the tender feet,
No cushioned pews to lull to sweet repose,
No silvery tones to soften God's stern truth,
No operatic strains, or cornet's notes,
Or organ's symphonies to please the sense,
To draw the crowd, to bring in worldlings
To the house of God. 'Twas a house of prayer.
For all the way was narrow, straight
the gate;
The honest seeker for the way of life,
In self-negation, taking up his cross,
Would bear it, as his Master did before;
To find he giveth most who loveth
most,
That truest service is to serve his race,
That truth in duty is the soul's best
prayer,
Not what we do for God, but what He does
For us is highest glory; and the grace of Christ,
Producing meekness, gentleness and
love
The best adornment, while the soundest creed
Is shown in soothing sorrow, wiping tears
From orphan's eyes, and righting widow's wrongs—

God calls such acts religion undefiled.
We say the way was narrow; so 'tis still;
Modern skill has sought to smooth its roughness;
To make it wider, so the world may walk Within the favored path. As palace
sleepers,
On some railroad train, will bear you onward
To your destined goal, in sweet contentment,
So the modern church would make the passage
To the shining gate so wide, so easy
You have naught to do but pay your money,
Buy your ticket through, and all your baggage,
Envy, lust and pride, your hatred, scorn and Jealousies, the wrongs you practice, or the sins
You hide, are ticketed at sight! Beware!
There is no railroad in the Narrow Way;
Who pass the portal of the heavenly gate
Are pilgrims still. Who sell you tickets Are deceivers all. The train with sleepers
Goes the other way! Its ease and comfort Lures to certain doom; and sooner or later
It will jump the track! Your pleasant trip
Will end in hopeless wreck.

THE LIGHT IS BREAKING.

The Religious Herald, the able organ of the Baptists in Virginia, of late has been considering the subject of "alien immersion," as it is denominated; concerning which that paper has interrogated a number of prominent Baptist preachers in certain sections as to the practice of pastors in the matter. Alien immersion is that sort performed by other than Baptist preachers. It seems that a number of Baptist preachers recognize as valid baptism by immersion performed by pedo-baptist preachers.

Dr. Broughton, the well-known evangelist of Atlanta, Ga., is a conspicuous advocate of this progressive movement.
There are a number of Baptist preachers who do not tolerate alien immersion. From the standpoint of these ultra immersionists water baptism, to be valid, must be administered by one who himself has been put down under the water, and that by an immersed preacher. The encouragement that the Herald seems to give to alien immersion has stirred greatly the feelings of Rev. Cranfill, of the big State of Texas.
This Texas divine is making quite a splutteration in the waters about his premises in consequence of the leaning towards alien immersion of so influential a paper as the Herald. The Herald's desire to put oil on the troubled waters in the case of this Texas divine is in spirit to be commended, but we opine that as a practical measure it will fail. The most demolishing thing the Herald said in reply to Rev. Cranfill was its reference to the doubt of the validity of Rev.
Cranfill's own baptism held by a Baptist preacher named by the Herald, inasmuch as Rev. Cranfill had been immersed by a Hardshell Baptist preacher. The Herald regards the Hardshells as heretics, who don't practice that part of our Lord's command: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," the logic of which position is that the Hardshell immersionist is incapable of administering valid baptism, and such logic leaves Rev. Cranfill in a bad fix indeed. This was the Herald's unkindest cut of all.

We verily believe that alien immersion will do our Baptist brethren good to practice. If pedo-baptists can give valid immersion baptism, it is perhaps not improbable that our Baptist brethren some of these days will acknowledge the scholarship of Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Methodists in their views of scriptural teachings on water baptism, etc.

Is it not possible, too, that they will with us partake together of our Lord's Supper before the millennial? The apostles of our Lord, except Judas, ate together the Lord's Supper. In God's Word it is nowhere said that they had been baptized in or with water previous to their eating together.

TO THE MEMORY OF REV. R. J. MOORMAN.

At a regular meeting of the Rocky Mount Ministers' Association, a motion was passed requesting the chairman to appoint a committee to draft resolutions with reference to the late Rev. R. J. Moorman, who was for some time a member of our Association.

Bro. Moorman was born at Callands, Pittsylvania county, Va. He joined the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1872, and was transferred to the North Carolina Conference, of the same Church, in 1888, serving faithfully his various fields of labor in these two Conferences. As a man, he was highly cultured and refined, and as a preacher, he possessed powers of eloquence. His last field of labor was in Rocky Mount, N. C., and extended over a period of four years, from 1896-1900. For some time prior to his death he struggled manfully to discharge his duties as a minister, and at the same time fought against a disease that was fast undermining his physical nature. It will surely seem clear now, even to his most severe critics, that he was but discharging duty under medical direction; for we rejoice to know that his own testimony bore witness to the fact that he died in full assurance of everlasting life. He died in Bristol, Tenn., August 19, 1902. Wherefore be it

Resolved, That since God in His all-wise providence has seen best to take from us our brother and co-worker, we bow reverently and submissively to the will of our Father, who has called him from his labors on earth to his reward beyond the limits of this life.

Resolved, That we return thanks to God for his many years of service and usefulness in his various fields of labor here, feeling that there are many yet, in the Church Militant, who can rise up and call him blessed, and that there are those beyond who have ere this given him a glad welcome. And we pray that his influence for good may still live in the hearts of those who knew him.

Resolved, That we extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved widow and children and friends of the deceased, and that in their time of sorrow we commend them to God, who alone can give comfort and cheer and help in such times of sore affliction.
And we pray God's richest blessings upon each one whom this dispensation of His providence has touched.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and also a copy to each of our town papers, and to the Raleigh Christian Advocate for publication.

RESOLUTIONS.

At the regular hours meeting of the Farmville Methodist Sunday school October 12, 1902, the following resolutions in regard to the death of our friend and brother, Mr. R. S. Paulett were presented by committee, read and approved:

R. S. Paulett, the subject of these resolutions, died at his residence on High street at half past 3 o'clock, October 7, 1902, in the 83d years of his age, and we realize that in his death our Sunday school has suffered the loss of one of its oldest members, who, for a number of years, has been a faithful and conscientious teacher in the Sunday school, who was always ready with open hand and generous heart to aid in any cause that was for the best interest of the school and the glory of God, and with his wise council and diligent discharge of duty inspired others to great diligence in the good work; therefore

Resolved, 1st, That in the death of our Bro. R. S. Paulett this Sunday school has sustained the loss of one whose cheerful life and faithful discharge of duty we hope and believe will prove a benediction to us all; as the sun goeth down and reflects back its light painting the western skies in beauty, so has our dear brother laid down the burdens of life and passed over the river to meet and be with the Saviour, whom in life he loved so well to follow, but his pure and beautiful life filled with good deeds will reflect back and prove an inspiration to each member of our Sunday school to be more diligent in the discharge of every duty, to promote the interest of the school, and to glorify our brother as an example.

2d. That we extend to his family church and community our hearty sympathies in this severe loss which we have all sustained, hoping that by the grace of God we may all be able to live such a life here that we may again meet him in that beautiful home that our Saviour has gone to prepare for all the final faithful.

3d. That a committee now be appointed to place in our lecture room a suitable life size portrait of our deceased brother to commemorate his diligent, faithful and inspiring life.

4th. That these resolutions be published in the local papers, a copy sent to the Methodist Recorder, and to the Richmond Christian Advocate for publication.

PURE HEART, CLEAR VISION.

When some one asked Cecil Rhodes as to his religious belief and its foundation, he is said to have replied that "it was a fifty per cent. chance that there was a God." That was very like Mr. Darwin's reply, who answered an anxious correspondent that he regarded the arguments for and against the being of God as equal. The question, he added, must be determined upon other than rational or scientific grounds. And, curious as some may think it, that was what Jesus Christ said. God is not to be discovered by logical processes, but by spiritual intuition. It is not the most profound in intellect that will discover God, but "the pure in heart." As a mere matter of reasoning and induction, neither theism nor atheism can demand the verdict. But "the pure in heart shall see God."

The most forlorn object in this universe is a tramp soul; a soul without love, without father and brother and sisters. One of the greatest of modern scientists has described to us the horror of spirit that came over him when he realized that his faith had been lost. He expressed with strong groans the hope that his children, who were still Christians, might never lose that apprehension of God which had perished for him.

It is not strange that spiritual things should be dependent upon spiritual perceptions. So are esthetic realities. When, listening to some great work of some wonderful master of tones, one is most deeply moved, the neighbor in the next chair is very likely asleep. It is told of Turner that when busily engaged in painting a dull friend dropped in to see him; and after looking over the artist's shoulder for a time he blurted out: "Turner, I never saw anything like that in nature." "I don't believe you ever did," was the artist's reply, without raising his eyes from his work. "But don't you wish you could?"

Is this an age of doubt? Yes. But it is also an age of faith. It was an age of doubt to Ingersoll and an age of faith to Moody.—Interior.

If the world has no need of Christ, we have no need of Him.—R. E. Speer.

No less than eight illustrated articles are to be found in the November magazine issue of The Outlook, which has also several full-page portraits of men of the day. The issue contains, in addition to what may be called its magazine articles, the usual full and carefully prepared history of the world for a week, editorials on current topics of great importance, reviews of books just published, and much other matter. It is to be remembered that The Outlook appears fifty-two times a year, and that the twelve large illustrated magazine numbers are included in the general subscription.

SHOWER OF CASH FOR MISSIONS.

Cleveland, Oct. 23.—A number of interesting addresses were delivered at to-day's session of the General Methodist Missionary Convention. Rev. Dr. W. T. Perrin spoke on "What a Presiding Elder Can Do."

President J. W. Bashford, of the Ohio Wesleyan University, delivered an eloquent address on the subject: "It Tendeth to Poverty." W. W. Cooper, of Kenosha, Wis., spoke on "What the Sunday School Superintendent Can Do."

"What the Pastor Can Do" was discussed by Rev. Dr. James Oliver Wilson, of New York, while Prof. J. W. McGruder, of Portland, Ore., took for his topic, "What a Local Church Has Done."

Rev. Dr. W. F. Oldham, of Chicago, one of the district missionaries, told what the officers could do toward carrying forward the missionary movement.

The sum of $250,000 had been raised up to 11 o'clock to-night for Methodist mission work. The contributions were made in the auditorium of the Convention hall, the Grays Armory. The scenes during the raising of the money were of the greatest enthusiasm. The subscriptions were called for at the end of two addresses by S. Earl Taylor, field secretary of the Epworth League, New York city, and John R. Mott, leader of the student movement throughout the world. Both speakers made earnest pleas for funds to further mission work.

Dr. Goucher, of the Executive Committee, then sent subscription cards throughout the large audience. Immediately afterward Bishop Thoburn arose and, speaking from a chair, said that he was authorized to state that if the Conference would subscribe $1,000,000 that he had $100,000 pledged by a gentleman whose name he would not disclose. Thereupon the collection began to receive the returns from the cards, and it was a fusillade of contributions that was heard from the recording secretary's desk. Sums ranging from $5,000 (the gift of an unnamed woman in Boston) down to small sums of money were heard for the greater part of two hours. Many of the contributions were in $1,000 and $500 groups, and were from the various Conferences and districts of the Church. Personal contributions of $1,000 were frequently sent to the desk.

When the sum of $140,000 (exclusive of the voluntary anonymous offering of $100,000) had been subscribed, Bishop Thoburn announced that he was authorized to state that if the Conference collected $300,000 there was an additional $25,000 to be placed in the fund. Immediately there was a renewal of the contributions, and at 11:30 o'clock the fund was well on its way toward the $300,000 mark.

The other work of the Convention in the afternoon and evening was devoted mostly to addresses and talks by the several leaders present in the various churches and church halls throughout the city. Bishop McCabe presided at the night meeting in Epworth Memorial church, and that church subscribed $13,500 to the missionary fund.

Bishop Thoburn was asked as to the identity of the anonymous contributor of $100,000, and said that he was not at liberty to give the name, but would admit that the person was not a Cleveland.

Cleveland, October 24th.—The closing session of the first General Methodist Episcopal Church was held to-night in the Grays' Armory. Three thousand persons were present. There was much devotional feeling shown, and the expressions were characteristic of that great body of Church people.

After a prayer and a hymn by a quartet, Robert E. Speer, one of the secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, spoke. His subject was "Christ Our Living Leader." He told of the need for leaders in the work of evangelizing the world. "Christians," he said, "should not quarrel over who shall lead; but if a competent leader arises all should follow him, glorying in the work that is being done for Christ's sake."

The closing address was made by Bishop Thoburn, of India. It was a hopeful statement of the outlook for mission work among the far-off peoples. He referred to the raising of the sum of over $300,000 last night for mission work, and said that nineteen days are left in which to raise the wished for sum of $500,000.

The Bishop said he thought the Methodist Episcopal Church was about to enter upon a revival of missionary work that would exceed any similar work in its history. The Bishop will soon return to India to his field of labor.

A special feature of the Convention was the singing of the association quartet, composed of Messrs. C. M. Keeler, Des Moines, baritone; E. W. Peck, Minneapolis, bass; Paul Gilbert, Duluth, Minn., first tenor; P. H. Metcalf, Grand Rapids, Mich., second tenor.

Twelve thousand dollars additional was added to the missionary fund by to-day's subscriptions, making the total $313,200. Bishop Thoburn announced that a resident of Cleveland stated that he would support 50 teachers in the Indian field for five years, a task involving the expenditure of $7,500. The announcement was received with applause.

A resolution was introduced by Bishop Warren and adopted by the Convention rising asking the Church throughout the country to swell the fund begun here to at least $500,000 before the Convention in Albany, November 12th. A resolution by Rev. Dr. A. B. Leonard asked the general committee to increase the Church apportionment for missions to $1 for next year.

Bishop Andrews announced the following committee to carry the message of missionary need and opportunity to the churches: Bishops Warren and Thoburn, J. R. Mott, Drs. Leonard, Carroll and John F. Goucher, of Baltimore.

Rev. Dr. W. F. McDowell, secretary of the board of education of the society, spoke on "Beloved, If God So Loved Us."

Rev. Dr. George B. Smith, of San Francisco, addressed the Convention on "The Need of Missionary Education in the Home Church."

"Education and Training of Young People in Scriptural Habits of Giving" was the subject of an address by Rev. Dr. Charles Edward Locke, of Buffalo, N. Y.

Rev. Dr. F. D. Gamewell, of New York, spoke on "What Money Means for Educational Work in the Foreign Field."

Dr. Gamewell at the conclusion of his address introduced Cen Wei Ching, a Christianized Chinaman and an English teacher in the University of Pekin. Ching's father and mother were killed in the recent Boxer uprising. He spoke interestingly of the work being done in his native land.

John R. Mott, leader of the student volunteer movement, spoke on "The Responsibility of the Church in the Present Crisis in Missions."—Baltimore Sun.

DEVOTION TO CHRIST.

(Isaiah 6: 8; Acts 4: 20.)

A shepherd one night when the storm was fierce, counting his sheep that had gathered into the fold, found that two were missing. Going to the kennel where his shepherd dog was lying with her young, he pointed to the wilderness which was growing darker, and said: "Two sheep are missing, go." She looked a moment at her little ones, then up into her master's face, and hurried away into the night, and came back with one of the sheep that were lost. The storm had grown fiercer, and the night darker, and the shepherd came again to his dog, and pointing out, said once more, "One sheep is missing, go." Looking down once more at her crying little ones and up into her master's face with mute despair, she arose and hurried away. Hours passed by, and the shepherd heard a scratching at his hut door. Going forth he found the dog, and she had the sheep that was lost. Leaving the same at her master's feet she staggered back to her little ones, and fell dead at the kennel door.

And when I read this story, I said, oh, the shame of it; here is a dumb brute, with never a thought of God, and never a hope of heaven, obedient to her master's command when he speaks but a word, and we have permitted our Master with nail pierced hands, spear thrust side, and thorn-crowned brow to plead and plead again, and we have refused to do His bidding. Let us catch one glimpse of His face anew, and go where He would send us.—Current Anecdote.

The Fiji Islands only a few years ago were inhabited by a man-eating people, whose most delicious meal was a human being. The Wesleyans brought the islands to Christ, and to-day those people so recently cannibals are self-supporting Christians and contributing to the evangelization of other countries.—Missionary Link.

LESSON VI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 9.

Text of the Lesson, Josh. xiv, 14-25.
Memory Verses, 14, 15—Golden Text,
Josh. xiv, 15—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]
 14-15 As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

Joshua, having lived a hundred and ten years and being conscious that the time had come for him to go the way of all the earth, gathered the tribes of Israel and reminded them that not one thing had failed of all the good things which the Lord had spoken concerning them (chapter xxiv, 29; xxiii, 14). He called for the elders, the heads of tribes, the judges and officers to present themselves before God at Shechem, and there he rehearsed unto them the story of God's dealings with them and entreated them to fear the Lord and serve Him in sincerity and truth, telling them that whatever they might decide he was determined that he and his house would serve the Lord. It was in order that they and all that they had might serve Him that He had brought them forth from the land of Egypt, the house of bondage (Ex. iii, 12; x, 26). If we have been redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, it is in order that we may with humility and gladness serve the living and true God while we wait for His Son from heaven (1 Thess. i, 9, 10; Acts xx, 19; Ps. c, 2). Our Lord taught His disciples that as He was among them as one that serveth the way of service is the way of true greatness (Luke xxii, 24-27), and that by love we are to serve one another (Gal. v, 13).

16-18. God forbid that we should forsake the Lord to serve other gods. We also will serve the Lord, for He is our God.

They certainly had every reason to serve Him only and truly, for, as they said, He had brought their fathers out of the bondage of Egypt and preserved them and brought them to that land, and Joshua had just reminded them that the Lord had given them a land for which they did not labor, cities which they had not built and vineyards and olive yards which they had not planted (verse 13). Yet they had already had occasion to say many times in their brief history, "O Lord our God, other lords beside Thee have had dominion over us" (Isa. xxvi, 13). That which Daniel had to say to Belshazzar, "The God in whose hand thy breath is and whose are all thy ways hast thou not glorified" (Dan. v, 23), might be truthfully said to many other gentiles as well as Jews, and how many seem to forget that it is God alone who giveth us life and breath and all things and in whom we live and move and have our being (Acts xvii, 25, 28). This should be enough to lead any one to wish to serve such a benefactor; but we cannot serve Him till we are redeemed, for, although He has created us, sin has separated us from Him, and the carnal mind, being at enmity with God, cannot please God (Rom. viii, 7, 8). As freely as God by His own power redeemed Israel from Egypt that they might serve Him, so freely He redeems every one who will let Him that all such may serve Him and walk in newness of life for their own highest happiness as well as for His glory (Rom. iii, 24; vi, 4, 6, 11, 13, 14).

19-21. And the people said unto Joshua, Nay; but we will serve the Lord.

Joshua in reply to their assurance that they would serve the Lord reminds them that they must be sincere, for the Lord is both holy and jealous. Holy is the only word that is used of God three times in one verse, and that only in two places (Isa. vi, 3; Rev. iv, 8). He, being holy, requires a holy people (Lev. xix, 2; 1 Pet. i, 15, 16), a people willing to be wholly His, separated unto Himself alone, that He may do His utmost for them and be magnified in them. God is called jealous in just seven different places (Ex. xx, 5; xxxiv, 14; Deut. iv, 24; v, 9; vi, 15; Josh. xxiv, 19; Nah. i, 2), though His jealousy is spoken of in other passages. The thought implied is simply that He desires to possess fully that which is His for the highest good of the possession. He delights to give and to bless, but He is hindered by our half heartedness and lack of confidence in Him.

22-24. The Lord our God will we serve, and His voice will we obey.

Hearing their firm protestation of a great determination to serve the Lord, Joshua further tells them that in taking this stand they must understand that they are taking a stand against themselves, and they must turn with their whole heart to God by putting away all strange gods from among them. We all need this teaching so much, for we are inclined to take sides with ourselves against God. We are apt to say as Simon Peter said to our Lord when He first spoke of His sufferings and of His death on the cross, "Be it far from thee (pity thyself) Lord; this shall not be unto Thee." But our Lord immediately taught Simon and the other disciples that all who would follow Him must deny self and bear the cross (Matt. xvi, 22, 24).

25. So Joshua made a covenant with the people that day.

This verse and also verse 1 says that it was done at Shechem, and as Shechem was a city of refuge (xx, 7) and signifies "shoulder" it is all suggestive of this—that we must find in the Lord our constant refuge from self and sin and in our conscious weakness dwell between His shoulders and let the government of all our affairs and of ourselves also be upon His shoulder (Ps. xlii, 7, 11; Deut. xxxiii, 12; Isa. lx, 6, 7). The stone that witnessed and heard it all (verse 27) is also suggestive of the stone of Isa. xxviii, 16; Ps. cxviii, 22.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 9, "God's Covenant and Ours."

Text, Ex. xiv, 3-8.

Three months had passed since the great horde of Hebrews had revolted from the tyranny of Egypt, forsaken their ancient homes, broken through the barriers on the frontier and poured resistlessly through the wild lands to the east until, in the very heart of the mountain crowned peninsula of Sinai, they camped in the great plain at the foot of Horeb, the holy mountain, revered for ages past by all the native tribes.

For generations past their fathers had lived in the midst of the idol worship of the Egyptian delta, with its vile rites deifying the powers of physical nature and debasing the human spirit to the dominion of bodily lusts. They bring traditions of a purer worship and higher ideas of the divine powers which have been derived from their Hebrew ancestry. These are to receive fresh working and new emphasis. God is to become different to them from what He has ever seemed to any people to be.

Moses has for years known this whole region, as he has led his sheep among these valleys. He goes up the mountain to think and receive direction from God. He gets it and gives the people a new form of religious worship based on former customs, enlarged and elaborated to higher meaning and deeper purpose. Around the new teaching he will build the nation, based on the fact of a divine covenant. They revere the memory of their progenitors Abraham, Isaac and Israel as worshipers of the one, only and true God, the Covenant Maker with men. He now appears in new relation as Covenant Maker with them as a nation, which is a far step beyond that of one who comes into agreement with individuals merely.

To catch the spirit of the times and feel the thrill of the new inspiration one needs to read carefully over and over again this section of Exodus, which recounts the incidents of that camping before the mountain. The study should begin with Exodus, nineteenth chapter, and carefully follow the narrative to the twenty-fifth chapter, dropping out the various laws recorded from the twentieth chapter, twenty-second verse, to the twenty-fourth chapter and arranging the different mountain ascents and down comings with the accounts of worship and revelation in such a way as to have a clear notion of the progress of events as they may have taken place. The fragmentary character of the section becomes more apparent the more it is studied.

The thought of supreme value in it all is the clear announcement of the purpose of God, "If ye will obey My voice, indeed, and keep My covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me above all people, for all the earth is mine."

Most notable is the repeated response of the people, "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient."

God's covenant with us is this same fulfilled by Jesus fully and by us to be kept with increasing devotion and understanding.

Heartsease and Rue.

Much of our joy in life is marred by the lurking consciousness of the other side of things, the wrong side of the tapestry, where threads of the weaving dangle and the pattern is lost in inextricable confusion. The sense of unreality and sham, of a great conspiracy of silence by which society exists, a tacit agreement to cover up dark and discouraging facts and keep them out of sight through polite illusions and pretense, embitters and hardens the mind. This state of feeling is unfortunately almost chronic in our day. Too many of our young people have tasted rue before winning heartsease. The dreadful disease of disillusion and unfaith in the great verities, the need of something to tie to, anchor upon, where there will be no dragging by contrary winds and tides, has eaten out the heart of genuine joy in life.—Christian Register.

The Religion of a Good Life.

The real test of the average man's Christianity is found not in what he does in church, but in what he does out of church. The best evidence of the worth of the Christian religion does not lie in the eloquent sermons preached by her ministers nor in the rapt attention of large audiences nor in the large enterprises pastor and people may together carry on, but in the way individual men and women live at home and in the way in which they deal with their fellow men in the shop, the store, the school and the court.—Reformer Church Messenger.

Do Not Be Discouraged.
 Never be discouraged because you things get on so slowly here, and never fail to do daily that good which lies next to your hand. Do not be in a hurry, but be diligent. Enter into the sublime patience of the Lord. Be charitable in view of it. God can afford to wait. Why cannot we, since we have Him to fall back upon? Let patience have her perfect work and bring forth her celestial fruits. Trust God to weave in your little thread into the great web, though the pattern shows it not yet.—George Macdonald.

The Happiest People.

Even in ordinary life the unselfish people are the happiest, those who work to make others happy and who forget themselves. The dissatisfied people are those who are seeking happiness for themselves.—Mrs. Besant.

Immortality.

Nature supplies the corpse and man the tomb,
 But God the light of hope that quells the gloom.

—Lippincott's.

MURDERS OF DRINK

SOME STATISTICS REGARDING CRIME IN THE UNITED STATES.

Matter of Common Knowledge, Says the Father Mathew Herald, That Few Quarrels End in Murder When the Principals Are Sober.

For several years past the Chicago Tribune has annually published a statement regarding crimes of violence in the United States. The method used in gathering those statistics is not unquestionably accurate, since, as we understand it, the report given is merely a summary of what the news dispatches bring to the office of the Tribune in the course of the year. However, says the Father Mathew Herald, the figures are valuable and probably approach nearer to authentic statistics than any others in existence.

According to the Tribune's figures there were in the United States during the year 1901 820 murders caused by intoxicating drinks. The incompleteness of this statement is manifest in a moment, when it is noticed that the list includes 4,646 murders that are recorded as the "outcome of quarrels." It is a matter of common knowledge that comparatively few quarrels end in murder where the principals of the quarrel are sober. For some reason or other of late years there has been an extreme disinclination upon the part of the newspapers to report drink's part in a murder case. Yet the intelligent reader readily recognizes it in numerous instances.

Take as an illustration a murder occurring in Chicago one Saturday night. Two men quarreled over a matter of $7. One of them went out and was gone a few minutes, returned and renewed his demand, was refused and shot the other man, instantly killing him and, turning, ran from the office, entered a saloon and took a drink. That that was not the first drink in the tragedy needs little confirmation, but the published reports will record this as a crime due to a quarrel rather than due to drink.

But suppose that the figures of the Tribune were accurate and that only 820 people were murdered in the United States during the last year on account of intoxicating liquors—even with that the showing would be that as a people we are allowing a well known, preventable cause to deprive a large number of our fellow citizens of life and to carry grief and suffering to a much greater number. Even 820 murders are a charge of appalling blackness against a people who will not take the necessary steps for the removal of the cause. We say "will not," for, so far as the great multitude of the American people is concerned, that is the case. It is true there are propositions for regulation, propositions for changing the methods by which drink is sold, propositions to increase the revenue received, but each and all of such propositions offer not the slightest deviation from the one constant fact that the sale of intoxicating drink, under any regulation, by any method, produces crime, makes murder.

The surprising fact about it is that the Anglo-Saxon race has known this for centuries. Two hundred and fifty years ago Sir Matthew Hale, then an eminent jurist of England, said:

"The places of judicature which I have held in this kingdom have given me opportunity to observe the original cause of most of the enormities that have been committed for the space of nearly twenty years, and by close observation I have found that if the murders and manslaughters, the burglaries and robberies, the riots and tumults and other enormities that have happened in that time were divided into five parts, four of them have been the issue and product of excessive drinking at taverns or alehouse meetings."

Murder touches us quickly enough sometimes. But how long can the saloon spatter the blood of its crimes in the faces of Christian people with impunity?

Certainly there is great reason why prohibitionists should increase their insistency and double the diligence of their propaganda.

Alcoholism and Suicide.

In thirty years the increase of alcoholism in Great Britain is estimated at more than 100 per cent. During the same period there has been a steady increase in the suicide rate. As regards attempts to commit suicide there has been a similar and even more decided increase. Voluminous and convincing statistical evidence proves these two points. It is likewise shown by Dr. Tatham's tables of occupational groups with a high rate of alcoholism that these groups furnish a relatively high rate of suicide.

The Drink Habit Means Failure.

You are more likely to fail in your career from acquiring the habit of drinking than from any or all the other temptations likely to assail you, says Andrew Carnegie in his recent book. You may yield to almost any other temptation and reform, but from the insane thirst for liquor escape is almost impossible.

After a Million Pledges.

Superintendent E. W. Chapin of the Washingtonian home, who has announced his determination to secure a million temperance pledges in Chicago by means of a syndicate of lecturers, has spent his life in temperance work. He joined the Good Templar order at fourteen and began lecturing before he was twenty.

Abstinence Rewarded.

President Schwab of the United States Steel corporation has given Alfred Hobson, a laborer in his employ, $200 as a reward for abstaining from liquor for the past year.

The reformers are making it hot in Norfolk for gamblers and proprietors of saloons who violate the Sunday closing law. Police Court Justice Taylor has announced a regular schedule of fines running from $25 and costs for first offence to $100 costs and $1,000 bond for third offence. A number of law violators have already been compelled to pay fines.

The Union Central LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

Religious News.

The revival meeting at Drummond-town Methodist church closed Monday night with 27 conversions and 16 accessions to that church.—Enterprise.

Rev. Mr. Crowder, who has been assisting our pastor in revival services of late, has returned home. Protracted meeting closed here on Tuesday. Fourteen persons were converted while it was in progress.—Enterprise.

The last Quarterly Conference of the High Street Methodist church was held last night. The reports showed the church to be in first-class condition, with all of its obligations discharged. The presiding elder of the district was asked to use his influence in having Rev. George E. Booker returned to the church.

Revival services closed at Trinity church Sunday evening, with an overcrowded audience. People were turned away after the aisles had been filled with chairs and the vestibules crowded with those standing. Great interest was manifested, several asking for the prayers of Christian people. The two weeks' meetings resulted in several conversions. Sunday night seven new converts were received into church fellowship. Rev. Mr. Bransford, the evangelist, left Monday for Bloxom, Va., to conduct services for two weeks.—Salisbury, Md., News.

Rev. S. C. Hatcher, pastor of Market Street M. E. church, in his sermon Sunday night paid a high compliment to Petersburg. It is, he said, the best city in which he had ever lived. There is less drunkenness and immorality here than he had noticed elsewhere. Since the recent developments in other cities, he is glad that he is a resident of Petersburg. However, on the other hand, he declared that there is more profanity in Petersburg than in any other city of its size in the State.

It is understood that the Rev. J. W. Moore, of Louisville, Ky., a distinguished Methodist minister, who was expected to come to the Virginia Conference this year, will not, after all, be transferred to this section. He has just changed to the West Texas Conference, where he will probably remain.

The Rev. J. E. Oyler, pastor of the Fulton church, will, it is said, be transferred to another field at the coming meeting of the Virginia Conference here. He will probably be succeeded in the Richmond pastorate by the Rev. A. B. Sharpe, of the West End church, at Hampton, Va.—Times.

A great audience greeted Evangelist Stuart at Epworth church last night. The preacher took for his text, "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off; If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out," etc., and preached one of the most pathetic and effective sermons of the meeting thus far. Most of the large audience remained to the after meeting and there were ten or twelve conversions. The whole audience was deeply stirred. The meeting grows in interest and power daily.—Virginian-Pilot.

Rev. J. L. Pribble, pastor in charge of the King George Methodist churches, closed a revival meeting at Trinity church several nights ago. About half a dozen persons were added to the membership of the church.—Dispatch.

Rev. C. D. Crawley, of the Methodist Conference, has lately purchased a farm in this neighborhood, and will soon begin building. His health, it is said, obliges him to give up his duties as a clergyman.—Brunswick Correspondence Dispatch.

An interesting protracted meeting is in progress at the Cabell Street Tabernacle. Rev. A. L. Franklin, one of the leading ministers of the Virginia Conference, is doing the preaching, and is pleasing large congregations nightly. Similar meetings have been held at Mount Vernon and Calvary Methodist churches, in the past few weeks.

Rev. Dr. Henry E. Johnson occupied his pulpit at Laurel Street Methodist church at both services yesterday. In the morning he spoke on the "Home," and at night he discoursed from the words, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

There were appreciative congregations present, and the sermons were pronounced by all to be the best ever delivered by Dr. Johnson since he has been pastor of Laurel Street church.

Two persons were received on profession of faith in the morning, and at night there was one conversion and several requests for prayer.—News.

The Clay Street Methodist church will be opened to-morrow for the first time in months, having been closed for repairs. The new pews have arrived and have been placed, and the church, with its new dress of paint and carpets, presents an attractive appearance.

Bishop A. Coke Smith will preach at the morning service and several former pastors will be present and make short addresses, among them Rev. Mr. Atwell, of Danville; Rev. R. T. Wilson, presiding elder of Petersburg; Rev. R. T. Rawlings, of Portsmouth, and Rev. Herbert M. Hope, associate editor of the Christian Advocate.

A fine musical programme will be rendered and a large congregation is expected.—News.

The Baptist Ministers' Conference of Richmond has declined to recommend the ordination of the Rev. J. R. Tillery, late of the Methodist Church, who sought admission into the Baptist ministry, and who has been awaiting the decision of the Conference for some weeks.

The trouble between Mr. Tillery and the Baltimore Conference, with which he was formerly connected, is well known. Upon leaving the Methodist Church he came to Richmond and applied for admission to the Baptist min-

try. He made the change, he said, from conscientious scruples. Meanwhile he engaged in active pastoral work.

The application of Mr. Tillery was referred to a special committee, which reported unfavorably to the Rev. Mr. Tillery. On Monday last the Conference adopted the report of this committee.—News.

It is understood that there is a prospect for an early addition of something like $50,000 or more to the endowment of Randolph-Macon College.

Since the offer of Mr. John P. Branch, of this city, to give $100,000 provided a like amount is raised by the college authorities, every effort has been strained to meet the conditions. President Blackwell was in the city a few days ago, but went on to New York, where he went partly in the interests of the college.

According to a local Methodist minister, who saw President Blackwell and talked with him while here, there is an unusually bright prospect for a successful issue in the movement. There is a distinct probability that a certain wealthy Methodist layman will give $20,000. Another has been asked for $30,000, and is now considering the proposition. It is believed he will finally come over.—News.

Another great audience was at Trinity Methodist church last night at the revival meeting, at which the Rev. Dr. Henry Clay Morrison, the celebrated evangelist from Louisville, Ky., is doing the preaching.

The large chorus choir of trained voices, under the skilful direction of Prof. J. L. Mitchell, led the singing, and there was a great volume of spiritual melody.

After the preliminary song service and a fervent prayer by Dr. Morrison, Rev. E. H. Spooner, the pastor of the church, made the announcement and earnestly besought the people to earnest and consecrated work in behalf of the meeting mission.

The sweet faced, gentle voiced, soul-loving evangelist prefaced his eloquent and tender sermon with an earnest plea for prayerfulness and heart consecration in behalf of the meeting. He never wanted to be in a cold, listless revival service. He besought every man and woman present to prayerfully read the 12th chapter of Romans before retiring for the night.

The text was the 5th verse of the 2d chapter of Matthew: "And he (Judas) cast down the pieces of silver and went out and hanged himself."

The intense earnestness, pathos and tender solicitude that characterizes this evangelist's efforts are very effective. There is absolutely nothing of the sensational order—no reference to local social conditions, no fiery denunciation of sinners, but a sweet and winsome presentation of the Gospel plan of soul redemption and salvation from the power of sin that holds his audience spell-bound.

The eloquent preacher's peroration, in which he related his own experience and pleaded for supreme love to Jesus, was a masterpiece that elevated the great audience. For an hour he had held the people spell-bound, and their hearts were tender and their eyes were moist. Hearty and feeling amens from the audience punctuated the eloquent peroration, and it seemed as if the people wanted him to go on and on.—Times.

GIFTS TO THE DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY OF RANDOLPH-MACON.

Mrs. I. N. Vaughan, of Ashland, who has already given $35,000 to Randolph-Macon College, has presented to the department of history $50 worth of books to be the nucleus of a library of history. The library will be known as the I. N. Vaughan history library, and will be under the supervision of the professor of history. It will be added to year by year, and will be composed largely of the best books on Virginia and Southern history.

In addition to this L. E. W. Meyberg, a popular and prosperous merchant of Ashland, has recently given $25 to the same department, which gift he proposes to repeat yearly in the form of books on economic subjects. This collection will also bear the name of the giver.

It may not be without interest to Virginians to know that the history department of Randolph-Macon College publishes, through the liberality of John P. Branch, of Richmond, the Branch Historical Papers, devoted exclusively to Virginia history. Two numbers of this annual publication have appeared.

The next number, consisting of about one hundred and fifty pages, will contain a study of the life of Thomas, Richmond's great editor; a sketch of Abel P. Upshur, and the third and last installment of the unpublished correspondence of Colonel Leoen Powell, of Loudoun, a correspondence bearing largely on the election of Thomas Jefferson in 1800-'01. All of these papers, with one or two others not mentioned, are the work of advanced students, who endeavor to throw new light on the subjects dealt with.

The Ritchie paper, comprising some twenty-five pages, was awarded the Bennett historical medal last commencement.

Dr. Dodd is an enthusiastic and successful instructor. In the class-room he seeks to make not only students of history, but investigators of the subjects.—News.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

The Methodist preachers' meeting was called to order by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, at 10:45 A. M. yesterday. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. N. Latham, of Park View church, Portsmouth.

The chair called for reports from the churches, and the following reported through their pastors:

Rev. George H. McFaden reported a good day at Wright Memorial Sunday. Rev. Frank T. McFaden, of the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia, preached an able sermon to a fine congregation at the 11 o'clock A. M. service, and made a most excellent impression. The pastor, Rev. George H. McFaden, preached at night. There was one conversion after the service.

Rev. G. W. Finley, of the Presbyterian Church, preached at Monumental church Sunday morning, to the edification of a large congregation. The pastor, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, preached at night.

Rev. C. L. Bane reported a large and interesting Sunday school at Cumberland Street church. His pulpit was filled at the morning service by the Rev. A. C. Hopkins, D. D., and Rev. Dr. H. H. Hawes at night, both of the Presbyterian Church. The sermons were able and practical, and were heard by large congregations.

At Centenary church, the pastor, Rev. E. T. Dadmun, preached morning and evening to the usual good congregations. At the night service he preached a short sermon and went from his own church to Epworth, where he assisted at the altar in instructing penitents in the way of salvation.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt, of Port Norfolk, stated that he had attended on an average three services a day during the past week. Rev. Carr Moore preached for him Sunday morning. He reported fifteen professions at the revival meetings in progress at his church, six of whom professed faith Sunday. He received five in the church Sunday on profession. He had a meeting in the afternoon for the special benefit of the ladies, which was one of spiritual power. These meetings will continue until Wednesday.

Rev. C. W. Cain heard Dr. Finley at Monumental church Sunday morning, and Rev. E. E. Dudley at the Court Street Baptist church at night.

Rev. J. N. Latham reported 276 scholars present at the Sunday school at Park View Sunday morning out of a roll of 300, which was the largest attendance for some time. He had a fine congregation to hear him at the 11 A. M. service, and received two new members by certificate. At night he exchanged pulpits with Rev. W. P. Hines, of the Baptist church.

Rev. E. K. Odell preached morning and night at Huntersville church to large and deeply interested congregations. He received two members by certificate, two on profession of faith, and had one conversion.

Rev. Ernest Stevens reported some improvement in the Sunday school at Owens Memorial church. Rev. Dr. Dudley, of the Presbyterian Synod, preached at 11 A. M. and Rev. G. B. Hanrahan at night, also of the Presbyterian Synod.

Rev. J. W. Crider has just returned from a two months' visit to Baltimore, where he has been under medical treatment. His condition is much improved.

Rev. W. P. Jordan reported an excellent Sunday school at Park Place. He worshipped morning and evening at the Park Place Presbyterian church.

Rev. D. B. Austin preached at Haygood Memorial church morning and evening, and at Lynnhaven in the afternoon.

Rev. W. R. Crowder had a good Sunday school and good congregation at Denbys church, Norfolk county, Sunday. He had no service at night.

Rev. George Wesley Jones reported that the pulpit of Trinity Methodist church was filled Sunday morning and night by ministers from the Presbyterian Synod. Rev. J. R. Rennie preached at 11 A. M. and Rev. B. F. Bedinger at 7:30 P. M. Both sermons were able and edifying.

Rev. D. J. Traynham, of Norfolk circuit, preached at Olive Branch Sunday morning and at Indiana in the afternoon to good congregations, and had pleasant services.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had six accessions to the Sunday school at Lambert's Point church. Rev. R. W. Jopling preached a most excellent sermon at the 11 A. M. service. Mr. McGhee preached at night. He received four new members by certificate and organized a Junior and Senior Epworth League, with a bright future for both.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian preached to large congregations at Memorial church, Berkley. Both meetings were full of spiritual power. He took up his collection for the Bible cause and raised over $27.

Rev. W. C. White, of the Presbyterian Church, preached at Queen Street Sunday morning, and the pastor, Rev. J. K. Joliff, preached at night.

Fine congregations attended both services at McKendree church Sunday. Rev. A. S. Venable, of the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia, preached able and instructive sermons morning and evening.

On motion, and by invitation of Rev. C. L. Bane, it was decided that when the meeting of to-day adjourn it adjourn to meet at Cumberland Street Methodist church next Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

The benediction was pronounced and the meeting adjourned in accordance with the above motion.—Pilot.

DR. MORRISON AT TRINITY.

The revival services at Trinity Methodist church, conducted by the Rev. H. C. Morrison, are growing in interest and are being attended with many conversions. Dr. Morrison preached three times yesterday, each occasion being marked with an audience that filled the building to its capacity. Fifty or sixty people professed conversion yesterday, and the number who have already expressed a determination to unite with the church is placed at 100. The morning service was listened to by an audience largely composed of women, and was enjoyed greatly.

At 3:30 o'clock Dr. Morrison preached to men, the service being under the direction of Secretary Thomas, of the Railroad Branch of the Y. M. C. A. The orchestra of the Railroad Y. M. C. A. took part in the musical programme, the singing being led by Professor Mitchell. The audience was composed largely of railroad men, and to these the speaker devoted his remarks. He said he did not propose to abuse any one; that he had no quarrel with any one, but that he came with a message from the Master, and would endeavor to point the way to salvation. Dr. Morrison related a number of incidents which had come under his personal observation as a travelling man, in which railroad men had figured.

"The men who follow the railroads are the bravest, the tenderest and the most intelligent class of men in the world," said Dr. Morrison. "I would

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presby-
terian Church, Chicago

Chicago. Reversing the usual course, Rev. F. De Witt Talmage in this sermon, on the approaching national anniversary, takes a look forward. The text is Matthew xiii, 38. "The field is the world."

Every republic has a Fourth of July. It has an annual holiday, set apart for living over again the scenes of its struggle for independence. It has a birthday celebration for banquets, fire works, oratorical pyrotechnics and for the arousal of patriotic enthusiasms.

The French republic's Fourth of July is celebrated on the 14th day of July. This is the anniversary of the grim fortress of a prison for state criminals was razed to the ground. The Bastille was to the French what the Tower of London was to the British. It represented to all the common people the tyrannies of a despotic throne. It represented to them the place where men and women, to please a royal whim, might be lodged for a little while on their way to quench with their life's blood the insatiable thirst of the headman's ax. So on the 14th day of July every car and wagon is stopped in the Parisian capital. Then the young men and maidens, decked in holiday attire, turn the broad boulevard of the Champs Elysees into a ballroom. Then in the French cities can be heard the songs of the merry-makers and the music from the different bands playing up and down almost every street. The Brazilian republic's Fourth of July is celebrated on the 15th day of November, the anniversary of the time when Dom Pedro's empire was overthrown and the exiled imperial family had to sail away from the waters of the Amazon. One of the first acts of the Cuban congress which assembled after the American soldiers had been withdrawn was to appoint a national holiday to commemorate the day on which the Cuban republic had gained her independence. So the people of the United States government should hold sacred the day on which Jefferson and Adams and Franklin and Sherman and John Hancock and Samuel Adams signed the memorable document which made the Goddess of Liberty a full grown queen.

But there is an unwise as well as a wise way of celebrating the modern Fourth of July. The first way is to glorify the past, as though our forefathers had won all the American victories that can ever be won. The other way is to take a national retrospect for the purpose of rousing our ambitions to go ahead and win the further victories that must be won in order to fulfill America's mission, and if any minister tries the latter way he cannot take in the full sweep of America's future influence and work unless he discusses them from a worldwide standpoint. He must assume his Fourth of July sermon to a world's theme, as Phillips Brooks, the most beloved man of New England in his day, keyed his ministry to an international tone when from a European city he sent to a friend at home a letter which read something like this: "Dear Harry—I wish you might do as I do every year. I wish you would annually spend two months abroad in travel. Such a vacation teaches you the immensity of God's providences and how small are the circumscriptions of our own individual lives and how small even the Episcopalian church appears to be when it is focused from across the seas." So the purpose of this Fourth of July sermon is to try to discuss the worldwide influence of America's future mission rather than to spend our time eulogizing what has been done at Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Brandywine, Valley Forge and Yorktown. The field of America's future usefulness is not to be limited by the Atlantic on the one side and the Golden Gate of the Pacific on the other side. It is to be as wide as the five continents, as ample as the two hemispheres. It is to take in all the mainlands as well as the isles of the seas.

America's Greatest Mission.

Emphatically the most important of all America's future missions is the spreading of the gospel until it shall "be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." The Bible does not state that the millennial day shall come gradually, as the sunrise first tips the eastern hills with light, making it appear as though the underbrush upon the tops of the mountains had been set afire by some careless campers. It does not state that the millennial day shall come as when the dawn in the beginning shoots its long, slender bars of yellow gold across the heavens. It does not state that the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, as the flood tide gradually creeps up the beach. But the Bible does teach that when the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be proclaimed in every town, village and city of every nation; when it shall be proclaimed in the mountain log hut and in the ship's cabin; when it shall be proclaimed under the shadow of every legislative hall and by the campfire of every heathen tribe; when it shall "be proclaimed in all the world for a witness unto all nations, then shall the end come." Then the millennial day shall be flooded with light, even as a darkened hall is instantly illuminated when the many different electric lights flash out at the touch of a single button. Then the millennial day shall be full of brilliancy, as the blackness of midnight was changed into the brightness of noon when God spake at the morning of creation the four simple words, "Let there be light," and there was light. The millennial day shall come as suddenly as the tongues of fire leaped out of the heavens when the Holy Spirit hovered over the heads of the praying, pleading, exultant Pentecostal worshippers.

If the millennial day is to come when the gospel shall be proclaimed unto all the nations of the earth, I ask you this pertinent question: What nation is better fitted to convey that gospel to all unevangelized nations than the American nation? Was not this nation, in the first place, founded in the name of God? Did not old John Robinson stand upon the shore just before the Mayflower sailed and dedicate to God the little band of pilgrim fathers? Was not that pilgrim band bound together by sacred covenant to walk in all his ways made known, or to be made known unto them, according to their best endeavors, whatever it should cost? Was not Maryland settled in the name of God, and Georgia in the name of God, and Pennsylvania in the name of God? On account of this past dedication of our forefathers dare America refuse to carry the gospel unto all nations of the earth?

This nation is especially fitted to carry the gospel unto all people because here we have no established church. Every religious denomination can free-handedly do its full stint of work.

A Story of Whitefield.

How the different religious denominations are able to work side by side in America for the scattering of the gospel seed may be illustrated by an incident in the life of George Whitefield. One day the great evangelist stopped dramatically in his sermon and, looking up as though addressing the throne of the Almighty, cried out in interrogation, "O Lord, are there any Presbyterians in heaven?" "No," came back the answer. "O Lord, are there any Episcopalians in heaven?" "No," again came the answer. "O Lord, are there any Methodists in heaven?" "No." "Who, then, are the denizens of the skies?" "Christians one, Christians all." So in the scattering of the gospel seed by the American nation there are no religious sects. In the sight of the government there are only Christians. The Calvinists and the Armenians, the close communicants and the Congregationalists, the Protestants and the Catholics, can work side by side because these different religious denominations believe in the atonement. They can and should scatter the gospel seed unto all nations because the American nation was settled and consecrated by our forefathers to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ.

America's second mission is emphatically the establishment of an international court of arbitration so that bloody wars in the future shall be an impossibility. That a great international court of arbitration can be established by the united action of the ten or twelve principal nations of the world is undeniable, and that such a court will be ultimately established is also unquestioned. When such a court is established, the United States, England, France, Spain, Austria, Germany, Italy, Russia, Japan and China will each have representatives upon that tribunal. Then when international difficulties arise these difficulties will be peacefully settled, as the Alabama claims were amicably settled before the Geneva tribunal which assembled in 1871, composed of the five representatives which were furnished by the United States, Great Britain, Italy, Switzerland and Brazil; as the Venezuela claims were settled before a tribunal which met in Paris in 1900; as the Alaska boundary line was amicably settled and as the war claims against the Chinese government by the different allied forces are now being amicably settled.

For Universal Peace.

Now, my friends, what civilized nation on the face of the globe is better fitted to lead in the establishment of this supreme court of international arbitration than the American nation? The different nations of Europe, I care not how strong some of them may be, are unable to successfully lead in this movement for universal peace because those nations are jealous of each other. Those different European nations cannot do as they would, no matter how noble and Christian their motives might be. If they could do as they wished, they long ago would have wiped off the face of the earth that most cruel and corrupt of all governments, the government of Turkey. When the sultan gave orders to his soldiers to massacre in cold blood the Armenians, a great wave of horror rolled over all civilized lands. Though William E. Gladstone was then a dying old man, he took up his pen and wrote a godlike protest. Indignation voicing the sentiment of every civilized government was heard alike in London, Paris, Berlin, Rome, Vienna, St. Petersburg and New York; but, though men and women were slaughtered by the hundreds and the thousands, though in midwinter young girls and boys were stripped of their garments and driven forth naked into the mountains to freeze and to starve and to die, though whole families were destroyed and whole regions desolated, yet not one nation of Europe was able to prevent or avenge the massacres because the European nations were jealous of each other. The nation that would attempt to obliterate the Turkish government would have the sword of other European nations plunging at its heart. But the American nation, being removed 3,000 miles from the European nations, is hand free, foot free and heart free. It can lead in this movement to establish a supreme court of arbitration because all foreign nations will realize that it is not making such a move to upset the "balance of European power" or to absorb new territory, and a Christian nation like the American which does not try to turn the sword into the plowshare and the spear into the pruning hook deserves to lose its influence, to fall from its proud position as a great and free nation and to perish from the earth.

Recognizing the fact that many people are looking forward to the time when war shall forever be abolished, an imaginative writer once described how that blessed condition was to be accomplished. He declared that the time would come when all European nations would be convulsed by a great international struggle. He pictured that event in the dim future. He arrayed every European nation upon one or the other side of the combat. But the night before the great battle was to open an angel in human shape would be seen going through the camps of the two armies. This visitor would stop long enough to pin upon every soldier's breast a sign. And when the two vast armies should next day prepare for battle and the command should be given to the troops to fire, not a rifle would flash, not a sword would be unsheathed, not a cannon would speak, because the sign pinned upon every soldier's heart would be the sign of the cross. The picture drawn by that imaginative writer may be accepted as a truthful one except in two or three facts. He describes that day as in the dim future. I believe the day is now almost at hand. Again that writer describes the peacemaker who will attach the emblem of the cross to the breast of the common soldiers as a man. I believe that peacemaker will not be a man, but a nation, and that peacemaking nation the American nation. America shall pin the sign of universal peace upon every European nation by the means of a supreme court of international arbitration. This sign shall decree that war, bloody, fiendish, demoniacal war shall be no longer; that war shall forever be as dead as the multitudes of dead soldiers whose bodies are now decomposing in the grave trenches around the world.

Defenders of the Weak.

America's future worldwide mission will also be found in her emphatic protest that might is not always right. Until the supreme court of international arbitration shall be established there will be many international injustices. From time immemorial the strong nations have been trampling upon and browbeating the weak nations. Heretofore the American nation has been unable to do much more than look on

At the Montgomery County Anti-Saloon Convention, held recently at East Radford, the mayor of the city made an address, in which he said that there had been sixty-four criminal cases in that city within sixty days, five-sixths of them caused by drink. He closed by saying with reference to the drink traffic, "I will do everything I can to put it down." Why not have such a mayor as this in every city and town in Virginia?

Down in a Southside Virginia city a story is going the rounds about a citizen caught leaning against a lamp post, apparently for support. When accused of being drunk he denied the soft impeachment. When asked what was the matter, he declared that he had the hog cholera. In cases where drunkenness seems to require an assumed name, we take it that this is as appropriate as any.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WILLIAM E. ROSS.

A letter from Mr. D. M. Cloninger, Stanley, N. C., dated July 5, 1900, asking for catalogue of our school, contains this statement:

"I am personally acquainted with some of your former students, all of whom are now holding lucrative positions, and they attribute their success to the thorough training obtained at your college, and speak in most glowing terms of you and your college."

We Teach—
Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Commercial Arithmetic, Business Practice, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English.

For catalogue giving full particulars and showing that we give liberal discounts for a knowledge of English for the Shorthand Department, and Arithmetic added for Commercial Department, address have you be as true to yourselves as you are to your calling. I know that away from your homes you are subjected to all sorts of temptations, and that all sorts of snares are set for you. Watch, men, and do not fall. You have precious lives in your care. It calls for a steady hand, a clear head and a keen eye. You know that whiskey is the cause of more crime, and misery, and unhappiness than any other one agency in the world. Now, there is a way to stop that, and for you to be the perfect men which the Lord God has intended and fashioned you. Don't take the first drink, and you will always be sober."

Continuing, Dr. Morrison urged his hearers to lead virtuous lives. He said that a woman had as much right to expect chastity and virtue and purity in a man as a man expected from a woman? Why should there be any difference? One was as great a sin in the sight of God as the other, though the world might take another view. He appealed to the congregation not to yield to their appetites and passions, but to stand up for the right and truth, to be men in the sight of the Lord.

At the conclusion of the service a great many men came forward to shake hands with the preacher, while about twenty professed conversion, with as many more asking prayers.

SERVICE AT NIGHT.

The service at night was one of the best which has been held since Dr. Morrison came to the city. The church was packed to the doors. The service was opened with a song service under the direction of Professor Mitchell. Dr. Morrison took his text from the 18th verse of the 18th chapter of Luke and the 43d verse of the 23d chapter of Luke.

Dr. Morrison favored early repentance and consecration to God. In old St. John's church he had stood and heard the speech of Patrick Henry repeated by the sexton. He, too, was a lover of freedom. But freedom from sin was more to be sought than personal freedom. He also favored freedom from avarice and greed, for in these days it seemed that men had become imbued with the idea that the Scriptures taught that it was impossible for a poor man to enter the kingdom of heaven.

The mad race for wealth had caused many a man to neglect his soul's salvation. He was not opposed to riches or to the honest man who made his fortune. Money was all right. But he was opposed to people letting money and wealth take possession of them and to detract attention from all that was good and pure and right and just in the world. He rejoiced to see a man who had money use it to the glory of God.

"All that thou hast must be sold and given to the poor and you must follow the Lord in humility of heart. Do not get so wrapped up in the mad race for a dollar that you cannot see your soul is in danger," he exclaimed. "The accumulation of riches should apply to the Christian. The more religion a man has the more he wants—a con-

Christ."

The service lasted until nearly 11 o'clock, many persons whose life had not been what they desired asking prayers, while a score professed conversion.

Dr. Morrison will remain for a few days longer, preaching twice each day—mornings at 10:30 and evenings at 8. He is an eloquent man.

STUART ON TEMPERANCE.

"The Stump Digger" was the subject of an able address at the Academy of Music Sunday afternoon by Evangelist George R. Stuart.

When the speaker opened his address the big playhouse was crowded with an enthusiastic audience composed exclusively of men. During his discourse Mr. Stuart discussed the evils of saloons and gambling in all their phases, and created considerable enthusiasm when he asked all in favor of having the white flag of temperance float over this country to stand up. Every man in the audience jumped to his feet, waving a handkerchief.

The scene was indescribable. At times during his address the speaker created much enthusiasm by his reference to the late William McKinley and W. J. Bryan.

AT EPWORTH.

Evangelist Stuart continues to draw large and appreciative audiences at Epworth church, where he discourses every day at noon and 7:30 o'clock in the evening. "Home Life the Pivot of the American Nation" was the subject discussed by Evangelist Stuart Sunday morning, when he preached an able sermon at Epworth.

At night Mr. Stuart preached again at Epworth, taking as his subject, "The Snares of the Fowler," and the sermon was one of the best heard in this city in many days.

The meetings will continue at Epworth until Wednesday evening, when the farewell service will probably be held.—Landmark.

MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The annual session of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Virginia Conference of the M. E. Church, South, began in this city yesterday morning, and will conclude to-morrow night. The attendance is exceptionally good.

The majority of the 77 delegates entitled to the Society are present, and several visitors are along. The session yesterday was opened with devotional exercises, after which an address of welcome on behalf of the Christian women of Richmond was delivered by Mrs. Minetree Folkes. Mrs. Hortense Kellum, of the Eastern Shore, responded. Reports were received from the Norfolk, the Portsmouth and the Lynchburg district, each of which was highly encouraging. Mrs. Ivey, president of the Society, made an interesting statement to the effect that Catalina Lopez, the Mexican girl who is supported by Mrs. Smith's legacy, and who has been dangerously sick, is now greatly improved in health.

COMMITTEES NAMED.

The following committees were appointed by the society:

Resolutions—Mrs. E. H. Martin, Mrs. Georgina Maynard, Mrs. E. L. Anderson, Mrs. R. W. Petross, Mrs. D. T. Elam, Mrs. Reynolds, Mrs. R. T. Beville.

Finance—Mrs. A. W. Nowlin, Mrs. N. E. Richardson, Miss Hortense Kellum, Mrs. Lucy Treakle, Miss Nannie L. Royall.

Auditing—Mrs. P. T. Barrow, Mrs. R. A. Compton, Mrs. Fayette Williams, Mrs. C. H. Hasker, Miss Martha Anthony.

Publication—Mrs. F. W. Martin, Mrs. J. W. Hamner, Mrs. Shelton Chieves, Mrs. W. D. Southall, Miss Rosa Southall, Miss Sallie D. Smith.

Platform Courtesies—Mrs. W. B. Beauchamp, Mrs. C. H. Hasker.

Missionary Candidates—Mrs. H. O. Cheatham, Mrs. W. C. Ivey, Mrs. A. L. West, Mrs. Shelton Chieves, Mrs. Lee Britt, Mrs. Richard Bagby.

Pages—Miss Pearl Valentine, Miss Mollie Johnson, Miss Bessie Hechler and Campbell Taylor.

WANT REPRESENTATION SMALLER.

Apart from the announcement that during the past year the organization has raised about $10,000 for missionary work, the most interesting feature of the session was presentation of a petition from the Monumental society, of Portsmouth, asking that the representation in the State body, already small, be further reduced so as to get the expenses of the annual meetings within the contingent fund—something like $500.

The petition will probably be laid on the table. The expenses last year were only a little more than $700, and considering all things, this is felt to be doing good. It is possible the Society will regulate that each auxiliary shall pay the expenses of the delegates it sends. The petition was as follows:

"We, the ladies of the Monumental Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, do hereby petition the body of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Virginia Conference to reduce the amount of money now used for delegates' expenses, noting first, the use of the contingent fee for the same, the Easter offering and Christmas offering and again amounts given to be used where most needed. The amount expended in 1900 was $720.53. That the representation be reduced to come within the contingent fee."

Luncheon was served to the ladies at the church, after which an interesting afternoon session was held.

Last night the annual sermon before the society was preached by Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, pastor of Broad Street church. His subject was "Love of Christ the Motive of Missionary Work"—Times.

BOXER HORRORS.

Woman Missionary Gives Interesting Account of Terrors She Endured.

The second morning session of the Woman's Missionary Society opened in the Broad Street Methodist church with the hymn, "Thou Everlasting Portion," followed by prayer led by Mrs. Southall. Miss Minnie Jarman, of Charlottesville, gave a short talk on "The Children of God," closing with a beautiful poem, then a prayer and the hymn, "Sweeter, Lord, have we heard the calling."

After the reading of the minutes by the secretary, reports were heard from West Richmond district, read by Mrs. Albert L. West, the district secretary.

The Revs. Dr. Lafferty and Herbert Hope were introduced to the Conference, and each made a few interesting remarks, the Rev. Mr. Hope paying a tribute to the president, Mrs. W. C. Ivey, after which reports from West Richmond district was resumed.

At the afternoon session of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society besides the usual routine business, containing many interesting reports, Mrs. H. C. Cheatham recited most beautifully the poem, "Faultless."

Revs. Lewis Betty, A. C. Berryman and W. J. Langhorn were introduced to the Conference.

MISS COFFEY INTRODUCED.

In introducing Miss Ella Rue Coffey, the missionary sent out by this society seven and a half years ago, Mrs. Bagby said:

"More than a hundred years ago Sir Walter Raleigh gave a hundred pounds sterling to Christianize Virginia; we thought when we sent our own Ella Coffey as a missionary to heathen lands we had more than repaid that hundred pounds, but now that she returns, telling of so much good work accomplished, we feel we have more than repaid it with interest."

Miss Coffey is of medium height, with dark hair, and deep, dark expressive eyes, a quiet impressive manner, and pleasant voice. Owing to a recent severe illness she was not able to tell half she wished to tell of her great work in China.

During the Boxer uprising Miss Coffey was in great danger. She and those with whom she was associated were notified that on a certain day they would be killed. They went on with their teaching and business was not suspended by any of the Christians, either native or American, though many of the heathen were panic stricken in this great time of danger and excitement. One day, while seated in her school room, a man entered who was known as the greatest rogue, and one of the very worst men in any country.

Passing around the table where she was seated, with his hand held behind him, he finally came around in front of her and dropped $15 on the table, telling her to buy a pistol. Said he: "I overheard you tell Miss Rankin in English you had no money. You must have a pistol with which to protect yourself."

"I have talked with the pastor, and he agrees with me that you must not remain here without a weapon for protection."

Though deeply touched, Miss Coffey declined to take the money, telling him she was not quite penniless, and he must buy himself a pistol, but he would not take the money back until she positively assured him she would buy herself a weapon.

In that time of trouble many of the rich and noble Chinese sent their sons to protect these noble women, who are trying to save their own sex in that heathen land, as the women can only be reached by women.

Miss Coffey gave an amusing and interesting account of the social customs and the attentions showered upon her.

As the Virginia school in Huchow is supported by Virginia Methodists, she gave a detailed description of the building. It is a walled enclosure, more like a jail than a school, having a wall twenty feet high, with no light except the door at one end and window at the other. There are numerous courts in this enclosure, in which the rains fall, but they are never reached by the sun's rays to dry up these rains, so it is a very damp place. All the rooms are dark, cold and damp. The residence of the teachers, just in rear of the school, is very beautiful, the interior being most beautifully carved, with lovely doors made of oyster shells, but very uncomfortable.

The teachers had as many partitions removed as possible, skylights put in at the risk of being sunstruck, and yet it was a dark, damp habitation; but the boys' school, conducted by Miss Rankin, was also quite as interesting as that of the girls, and there were numbers of young men studying to be teachers and preachers, who on Sunday afternoon would mount boxes or barrels on the street corners and preach to the rabble in spite of jeers and vile epithets of all sorts. Indeed, all of Miss Coffey's talk showed a nobleness in heroism in the Chinese never dreamed of by Americans.

In the Boxer uprising never but two native Christians were known to recant, while thousands were tortured and killed, many of whom would have been spared had they even uttered one word of recantation.

EVENING SERVICE.

At the evening service devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Dr. Kabler, of Campbell, after Mrs. Colyer, formerly Miss Smithey, of Virginia, addressed the meeting. She first went out as a missionary to China; but, after her marriage to Mr. Colyer, they went to Korea, which was entirely without Christians, the people being devil-worshippers, believing that the air was full of spirits, either good or evil, and all kinds of sacrifices were made to exorcise these evil spirits and draw to them the good spirits.

Mrs. Colyer is very earnest, very impressive and with it all a most attractive speaker. She spoke especially of the many difficulties under which women work and worship in foreign lands, it being a deep disgrace for a woman to appear on the streets unattended, and they are the objects of jeers and jibes, and have every vile epithet heaped upon them, and yet those native Christian women go through those streets under all these difficulties to teach their heathen sisters the beauties of the Gospel, and it is noticeable that the Gospel is so gladly received by those who have it explained to them and to what heights these heathens rise in their Christian experience.

At the close of Mrs. Colyer's talk, Mrs. W. B. Beauchamp was made a life member of the missionary society, the necessary amount, $20, being contributed by the delegates.

Mr. Beauchamp announced that Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock, vehicles will be at the church to convey all who wished to, to take a ride to the Methodist Orphanage, which is of such great interest to all Methodists of Virginia. It is expected that a large crowd will visit the place.

ZEAL OF SECRETARIES.

Perhaps the great success of this great body of Christian women is more largely due to the zeal and earnestness of the district secretaries who organize auxiliaries and visit and write them to keep the interest from flagging.

Mrs. C. H. Hasker, of Richmond District, has long been identified with missionary work, and is untiring in all good work. Mrs. A. L. West, of West Richmond District, is also well and favorably known as a great worker. Mrs. E. L. Martin, of Charlottesville; Miss Fannie Robinson, of Rappahannock; Miss Mayme Porter, of Danville; Mrs. F. W. Martin, of Lynchburg; Mrs. H. T. Bacon, Farmville District; Mrs. Shilton Chieves, Mrs. Smith N. Brickhouse, of Norfolk; Mrs. Lee Britt, Portsmouth, and Mrs. Bettie A. Rue, of Eastern Shore districts, all have worked with untiring zeal to make this missionary work a success, and the fine reports from all these districts show their efforts have been successful.

There are a number of young women in the Convention, who are growing up in the work to take the place of those who will soon go to their great reward. The great number of those clad in the sable emblems of grief is especially noticeable. The Conference will probably adjourn to-day.

THE AFTERNOON MEETING.

In the afternoon most of the time was taken up with the conclusion of the routine business and the reception of reports, all of which were of an excellent character. The society voted down the petition from the Monumental Auxiliary of Portsmouth, asking that the representation at the annual meetings be reduced so that the expenses of these meetings may be gotten within the contingent fund. The representation is already very small, and it was not deemed advisable to cut it down further. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. W. C. Ivey, of Lynchburg; Vice-President, Mrs. Bagby, of Petersburg; Secretary, Mrs. Britt, of Suffolk, and Treasurer, Mrs. A. W. Nowlan, of Lynchburg. The society decided to meet next year in Norfolk.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon about seventy of the ladies present were taken on a trip to the orphanage, where they spent a most pleasant hour. They went on the street cars to the Home for Incurables, where they were met by omnibuses. The ladies expressed great interest in the work of the orphanage.—Times and News.

BRIBE GIVING AND TAKING.

In printing a fine full-page portrait of Mr. W. J. Folk, the St. Louis Circuit attorney who has brought about the exposure of bribery in St. Louis and the conviction of bribe-givers and bribe takers, The Outlook remarks: "For nearly a year he has been the central figure in the most remarkable prosecution of political knavery since that of the Tweed Ring in the early seventies. This prosecution has resulted in the conviction, not only of bribe-takers, but of bribe-givers, and has brought home to the rich and influential classes of St. Louis the extent to which the responsibility for civic corruption rests upon them. Mr. Folk was nominated for his present office against his protest, but, having been elected, has discharged its duties against still stronger protests from party leaders who put him in nomination. Democratic corruptionists, as well as Republican, have been prosecuted without fear or favor."

The following table, compiled from the eighth annual "Abstract of Labor Statistics of the United Kingdom," recently issued by the British Board of Trade, shows the standard rates of wages per week for various trades recognized in London at the beginning of 1902:

"Your religion is good if it is vital and active; if it nourishes in you confidence, hope, love, and a sentiment of the infinite value of existence; if it is allied with what is best in you against what is worst, and holds forever before you the necessity of becoming a new man; if it makes you understand that pain is a deliverer; if it increases your respect for the conscience of others; if it renders forgiveness more easy, fortune less arrogant, duty more dear, the beyond less visionary. If it does these things it is good, little matter its name. However rudimentary it may be, when it fills this office it comes from the true source, it binds you to man and to God.

"But does it perchance serve to make you think yourself better than others, quibble over texts, wear sour looks, domineer over other's conscience or give your own over to bondage, stifle your scruples, follow religious forms for fashion or gain, do good in the hope of escaping future punishment—oh, then, if you proclaim yourself the follower of Buddha, Moses, Mahomet, or even Christ, your religion is worthless—it separates you from God and man."—"The Simple Life" (McClure, Phillips & Co.)

FUNNY SCHOOLBOY "FACTS."

According to the St. James Gazette, London, the historical and other "facts" given here are taken from schoolboys' examination papers:

er its own personal interests. But now that time is past. The American nation—and when I speak about the American nation I naturally mean the United States government—has grown to be so strong that by the power of its great navy and its great multitude of inhabitants it can successfully and in a Christian spirit take up the causes of the weaker and the more helpless nations when those nations are being downtrodden and unjustly used by the greater governmental powers. The American nation can do for the helpless and weaker nations what it did for suffering and helpless Cuba. When the Spanish governor general of Cuba, General Weyler, began to murder and to imprison and to exterminate and to rob the Cubans, he did not for one instant suppose that in order to protect and save a neighboring people the congress of the United States would declare war against Spain and at one sitting vote $50,000,000 to the president of the United States to carry on that war. But the United States government did throw its protecting arm about that suffering people. The United States government did offer that protection in an unselfish manner. As soon as the Cuban islands were rescued from Spanish tyranny the United States raised Cuba to the dignity of a sister republic. When the United States government declared war against Spain, the Spanish government did not for one instant suppose that the Philippine Islands would be snatched from Spanish control, but they were. No sooner did the guns of Admiral Dewey echo round the world than the people of America realized that there were other islands suffering from the tyranny of Spain as well as the Cuban islands. So the stars and stripes were hoisted over the Philippine Islands as well as in Havana harbor. And when those stars and stripes were raised in the east as well as in the west the United States government declared that its protecting arm should care for the downtrodden races of the Pacific as well as those of the Atlantic. And so one of the mightiest and the purest and the holiest motives of America's future mission will be to care for helpless and unjustly treated nations wherever they may be found until a supreme court of international arbitration can be established. Then those weaker and downtrodden nations shall be able to care for themselves.

The Lesson Taught by Penn.

And I would especially plead for the American nation to start forth and succor the helpless and weaker nations because God always blesses the individual as well as the mighty nation that is true to those who are weak. Do you know why the colony of Pennsylvania never had any difficulties with the American Indians? When Massachusetts and Virginia were being decimated by Indian wars, Pennsylvania colonies were living in peace and happiness with the redskins because William Penn was always true and honorable with the original settlers of the American soil. When the great Christian Quaker was about to sail for America, King Charles of England asked William Penn if he should not send over a regiment of soldiers to protect the young colony. "No," answered William Penn; "I do not want a regiment of English soldiers.

I shall have no trouble with the Indians because I intend to buy the land from them." "Buy the land from the Indians!" exclaimed King Charles. "What do you mean? Why, I have deeded you that tract of land. It is mine, and I gave it to you. For what then, William Penn, did you pay me $16,000?" "I paid you the $16,000," replied the brave Quaker, "to purchase your good will, not the land. That land, your majesty, does not belong to you any more than it does to me. The land of Pennsylvania does not belong to you any more than the city of London would belong to a party of American Indians who in a canoe might be blown across the Atlantic and land upon our shores and who then might go up the Strand waving their tomahawks and shouting, 'The city of London is ours because we discovered it!'" So William Penn, believing that all weak and helpless people should be justly protected, crossed the Atlantic and made his famous agreement with the Indian chiefs under the "Charter oak." And as a result of that agreement the Pennsylvania colonies lived in peace and happiness because they were true to the helpless. So God will prosper America's future if the American nation is true and faithful in its protection and care of the weaker and helpless nations.

But perhaps the greatest mission of America next to scattering the gospel of Jesus Christ is to prove that its people can be true to God in its days of prosperity as well as in its days of adversity. When a people are poor, weak and helpless, when a troubled and bleeding and suffering people are struggling for liberty and for their very existence, when a collection of ex-slaves are following their leader through the weary journey of a forty year tramp through the wilderness, it is not so difficult for them to pray and to worship God, but it is difficult for a people to be true to God unless when riches come and prosperity comes and unlimited influence comes they have an especial grace given to them. It is difficult to be true to God when the mighty fortresses have been builded at the mouth of every harbor to keep out the foreign foe and when the rattle of the factory and the whistle of the steam engine and the blow of the hammer and the rasp of the saw are all playing an accompaniment to the tune of a national financial success.

Reconsecrate the Nation.

As the American nation is a government for the people and by the people, I would have every one of us this Fourth of July season reconsecrate our nation to God by reconsecrating our own personal lives to his divine service. When the ambassador from Germany appears at the White House and presents his official documents, he does not come as the representative of the German nation, but as the personal representative of Emperor William. The ambassador of England represents King Edward. The representative of Italy represents King Victor Emmanuel. But when America's ambassador goes abroad he does not represent the president or the secretary of state, but he represents the people—the common people of America.

Seek first the kingdom of God.

"Its aim is to advocate and magnify the things which worldwide Methodism holds in common."

—Central Christian Advocate.

"A high-grade periodical, worthy of a place in every Methodist home."

—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"Instructive, entertaining, edifying."

—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A vigorous religious monthly, one that should be a benediction to many homes, and an inspiration to many lives."

—Methodist Magazine and Review.

"Ought to run easily to an issue of a hundred thousand."

—Richmond Christian Advocate.

"It ought to take the place in our Methodist homes of magazines of less religious character."

—Arkansas Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."

—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"Worthy the great Church of which it is a literary exponent."

—St. Louis Globe-Dem.

"Takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."

—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"Welcomed by the whole Methodist family."

—Bishop C. C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."

—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"I hope every Christian will have this beautiful magazine."

—Bishop J. F. Hurst.

"It ranks with the best."

—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart."

—Bishop W. A. Candler.

"A gem among the monthlies of our land."

Editorial.

JEWS MORE IMPORTANT THAN METHODISTS (?)

One would think that there were more Jews in Richmond and in the State at large than there are Methodists, if he saw only the Richmond dailies. Week after the week the discourses of a Jewish Rabbi are served up to the readers of these papers, while rare indeed are the times when a Methodist sermon is reported in full. Bishop A. Coke Smith preached twice at the reopening of Clay Street church last Sunday. There is a short notice of the service, but not only is there no report of the sermon, but not even the text is given. If it had been the reopening of the Jewish synagogue, it is likely that a whole page would have been given up to it, and special cuts would have been made of the building as it was, and as it is now, of the Rabbi who founded it, and of the present eloquent and extraordinary person in charge of it. Why is this? Are all the editors and reporters of these daily papers Jews? Or are all of their readers Jews? One would naturally think so. Perhaps, however, some of the leading advertisers are Jews. Can that be the reason that the Richmond dailies so persistently publish the utterances of the Jew and are so indifferent to the Methodists? There must be some reason.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

A newspaper and a letter from a friend in Kentucky inform me of some trouble in the Kentucky Conference. Some three years ago a preacher of that Conference was expelled from the Church on charges of immorality. He appealed to the General Conference, and the Committee on Appeals reversed the decision of the lower court, as the letter which I have received states, on legal grounds—that is to say, because the defendant was not permitted to testify in his own case. The late Kentucky Conference found the man restored and among them. A motion was made to locate him, but the Bishop said: "Wait till his case comes up regularly," or words to that effect. When his name was called, the motion was renewed, whereupon the Bishop informed the Conference that the man was not in their hands; he had transferred him to another Conference. He had opened a skylight, and the bird had flown. The case has been published in a paper, and a document informing the public of the facts has been sent to all the preachers of the Conference to which the transfer was made. My reflections are as follows:

1. Legal grounds are not sufficient to reverse a case; it should have been remanded for a new hearing. A case should be reversed on its merits.

2. When a case is reversed, and an expelled minister is restored, he returns to his Conference in good standing, and should not suffer in any way for what he was tried for.

3. No man should be transferred during the session of the Conference to which he belongs till his character has been passed. To do otherwise is to render nugatory the rule requiring an annual examination of character.

4. The law is defective, and should be amended. The dismissal and reception of ministers from one Conference to another should be made a matter of Conference action. A man should be dismissed by vote and carry a certificate of honorable dismissal from the secretary of the Conference. His reception should also be made a matter of vote, and no man should be placed in a Conference against the will of that Conference. This would be a step in the direction of democracy; but democracy is right.

It seems that the man involved in the case above was prominent in the steps by which H. C. Morrison was expelled from the Church for preaching at a union camp-meeting in Texas some years since. The trial and expulsion of Morrison was an infamy; but by a ruling of a long-headed Bishop, Morrison was restored to the Church and ministry. Whether the feeling engendered by the Morrison case had any influence in the above case I know not. Our Bishops have tremendous power; but fortunately they are usually men of God, and only use their power for the glory of God and the good of humanity. Where a Bishop is selfish he can and may do much harm. If he is deeply pious, he is a wonderful power for good. I have usually loved the Bishops where I have come in contact with them. What a noble soul was Bishop Paine, and how I loved him! Bishop McTyeire was a favorite of mine; he was slow, but sure; his judgments were seldom wrong, and a more unselfish man never lived. Bishop Pierce was as plain as an old shoe, and as eloquent as Cicero. Wightman and Doggett were classics on fire. Doggett could not joke, but once upon a time he became witty. At my table he called for the sauce; I handed it to him, remarking that my wife prepared a sauce sometimes that I did not like as well as this. "Ah!" said the Bishop, "what kind of sauce was that?" "Domestic sauce," said I. "And," said he, "what are its ingredients?" "The principal ingredients?" "The principal ingredient," said I, "is slack jaw." "That," said the Bishop, "is not very palatable, but it is often very wholesome."

PLIABLE—NO BURDEN ON HIS BACK.

BY REV. HERBERT T. BACON.

To one who has read Bunyan's book—and who has not?—Pliable is one of the most interesting and striking of all his characters, and the fact that the world is so full of Pliables and so many of us when reading of him can say, "I am that Pliable," adds to its interest. In company with "Obstinate," who is like himself an inhabitant of the "City of Destruction," he goes in pursuit of Christian, one of their fellow-citizens, who has started to go on a pilgrimage to the "Celestial City," but when he overtakes him, he is so charmed with Christian's description of the place to which he is going that he decides to go along with him—rest, crowns, rewards, glories, all float before his almost enraptured vision, and he is minded to go with the pilgrim. One thing he lacks to give him earnestness and perseverance and a determination to relinquish everything that he may reach the Celestial City. It is the burden on his back which is wanting. He has no sense of sin.

This sense of sin has been a torture to Christian, his companion, by night and by day. For days and weeks he has been praying and weeping under a consciousness of sin, crying: "Oh, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death?"

Both fall into the Slough of Despond. Pliable, with a few sharp words of reproach to Christian as having deceived him, pulls himself out of the mire and returns home, and we hear no more of his going on pilgrimages.

We are afraid that our own time is prolific of its "Pliables," who hear with delighted ears of the love of God, the delightfulness of the way in following Christ, the ending in glory and honor and immortality, but where, oh where, is the consciousness of sin, that disease of the heart from which David prayed so earnestly to be delivered, that fearful malady from which the shed blood of Christ only saves, that to be rid of the inhabitants of heaven rejoice with louder and more joyful strains than over any other foe?

Brethren, in our preaching, in our newspaper articles, let us put the great burden of sin on the back of Pliable and his descendants. There is where the Holy Spirit has placed it (John 16: 8-11). There let it so gall and distress him, that, triumphing over every difficulty, he will go with Christian to the cross to be eased of his burden.

COMPLAINT MADE AGAINST OUT- SIDE MINISTERS.

There is some dissatisfaction among laymen over the fact that many of the most prominent pulpits in the Virginia Methodist Conference are occupied by men who have been transferred from other States. It is contended by some of the Methodists that in the Virginia Conference there are men of conspicuous talent who have never been given a fair showing, but have always held small town or country churches, and this, it is further said, is unjust in view of the fact that many of the best positions are given men from other Conferences.

"There is a disposition among some official members," said a Methodist to a News representative to-day, "to have the Bishop presiding transfer and appoint some prominent minister of another Conference to the best charges in this State. We have in the Virginia Conference men who for eloquence and learning and other requisites that can hardly be equaled in the South.

"Then, too," said this gentleman, "these are the men who have accomplished great good in the places where they have been sent, and it does seem to me to be unjust to forever keep them in obscure places when they are fully capable of serving other churches with satisfaction."

Should this question come up for official discussion the proper body to take action would be the Bishops' Council, composed of the Bishops and the presiding elders.—Richmond News.

IT SOUNDED WELL.

"Our pastor said a good thing in his last sermon."

"What was it?"

"He said the wings of the dove of peace are lined with the tender sheen of effulgent good will to men, while in his beak he bears the olive branch of perennially blossoming love."

"What did he mean?"

"Blest if I grapple it myself exactly, but it sounded good while he said it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

He who cares not for the heathen cares not for his own soul.—Bishop Galloway.

BLACK ROCK

RALPH

"Perhaps not," replied Nelson, "but I wish Mr. Craig were at home." And then he added, "There's Idaho and Slavin together, and you may bet the devil isn't far off."

But Graeme laughed at his suspicion, and we passed on. The orchestra was tuning up. There were two violins, a concertina and the cello. Billy Breen was lovingly fingering his instrument, now and then indulging himself in a little snatch of some air that came to him out of his happier past. He looked perfectly delighted, and as I paused to listen he gave me a proud glance out of his deep, little, blue eyes and went on playing softly to himself. Presently Shaw came along.

"That's good, Billy," he called out. "You've got the trick yet, I see."

But Billy only nodded and went on playing.

"Where's Nixon?" I asked.

"Gone to bed," said Shaw, "and I am glad of it. He finds that the safest place on pay day afternoon. The boys don't bother him there."

The dancing room was lined on two sides with beer barrels and whisky kegs. At one end the orchestra sat; at the other was a table with refreshments, where the soft drinks might be had. Those who wanted anything else might pass through a short passage into the bar just behind.

This was evidently a superior kind of ball, for the men kept on their coats and went through the various figures with faces of unnatural solemnity, but the strain upon their feelings was quite apparent, and it became a question how long it could be maintained. As the trips through the passageway became more frequent the dancing grew in vigor and hilarity until by the time supper was announced the stiffness had sufficiently vanished to give no further anxiety to the committee.

But the committee had other cause for concern, inasmuch as after supper certain of the miners appeared with their coats off and proceeded to "knock the knots out of the floor" in break-down dances of extraordinary energy. These, however, were beguiled into the barroom and "filled up" for safety, for the committee were determined that the respectability of the ball should be preserved to the end. Their reputation was at stake not in Black Rock only, but at the Landing as well, from which most of the ladies had come, and to be shamed in the presence of the Landing people could not be borne. Their difficulties seemed to be increasing, for at this point something seemed to go wrong with the orchestra. The cello appeared to be wandering aimlessly up and down the scale, occasionally picking up with the tune with animation and then dropping it. As Billy saw me approaching he drew himself up with great solemnity, gravely winked at me and said:

"Shlipped a cog, Misther Connor! Mosh hunfortunate! Beauchiful instrument, but shlips a cog. Mosh hunfortunate!"

And he wagged his little head sagely, playing all the while for dear life, now second and now lead.

Poor Billy! I pitied him, but I thought chiefly of the beautiful, eager face that leaned toward him the night the league was made and of the bright voice that said, "You'll sign with me, Billy?" and it seemed to me a cruel deed to make him lose his grip of life and hope, for this is what the pledge meant to him.

While I was trying to get Billy away to some safe place I heard a great shouting in the direction of the bar, followed by trampling and scuffling of feet in the passageway. Suddenly a man burst through, crying:

"Let me go! Stand back! I know what I'm about!"

It was Nixon, dressed in his best—black clothes, blue shirt, red tie, looking handsome enough, but half drunk and wildly excited. The "Highland Fling" competition was on at the moment, and Angus Campbell, Lachlan's brother, was representing the lumber camps in the contest. Nixon looked on approvingly for a few moments. Then, with a quick movement, he seized the little highlander, swung him in his powerful arms clean off the floor and deposited him gently upon a beer barrel. Then he stepped into the center of the room, bowed to the judges and began a sailor's hornpipe.

The committee were perplexed, but after deliberation they decided to humor the new competitor, especially as they knew that Nixon with whisky in him was unpleasant to cross.

Lightly and gracefully he went through his steps, the men crowding in from the bar to admire, for Nixon was famed for his hornpipe. But when after the hornpipe he proceeded to execute a clog dance, garnished with acrobatic feats, the committee interfered. There were cries of "Put him out!" and "Let him alone! Go on, Nixon!" And Nixon hurred back into the crowd two of the committee who had laid remonstrating hands upon him, and, standing in the open center, cried out scornfully:

"Put me out! Put me out! Certainly! Help yourselves! Don't mind me!" Then, grinding his teeth so that I heard them across the room, he added, with savage deliberation, "If any man lays a finger on me, I'll—I'll eat his liver cold."

He stood for a few moments glaring round upon the company and then strode toward the bar, followed by the crowd, wildly yelling. The ball was forthwith broken up. I looked around for Billy, but he was nowhere to be seen. Graeme touched my arm.

"There's going to be something of a time, so just keep your eyes skinned," he said.

"What are you going to do?" I asked.

"Do? Keep myself beautifully out of trouble," he replied.

In a few moments the crowd came surging back, headed by Nixon, who was waving a whisky bottle over his head and yelling as one possessed.

"Heno!" exclaimed Graeme softly. "I begin to see. Look there!"

"What's up?" I asked.

"You see Idaho and Slavin and their pets," he replied. "They've got poor Nixon in tow. Idaho is rather nasty," he added, "but I think I'll take a hand in this game. I've seen some of Idaho's work before."

The scene was one quite strange to me and was wild beyond description. A hundred men filled the room. Bottles were passed from hand to hand, and men drank their fill. Behind the refreshment tables stood the hotel man and his barkeeper, with their coats off and sleeves rolled up to the shoulder, passing out bottles and drawing beer and whisky from two kegs hoisted up for that purpose. Nixon was in his glory. It was his night. Every man was to get drunk at his expense, he proclaimed, flinging down bills upon the table. Near him were some league men he was treating liberally, and never far away were Idaho and Slavin passing bottles, but evidently drinking little.

I followed Graeme, not feeling too comfortable, for this sort of thing was new to me, but admiring the cool assurance with which he made his way through the crowd that swayed and yelled and swore and laughed in a most disconcerting manner.

"Hello!" shouted Nixon as he caught sight of Graeme. "Here you are!" passing him a bottle. "You're a knocker, a double handed front door knocker. You polished off old whisky soak here, old demijohn," pointing to Slavin, "and I'll lay five to one we can lick any blankety blank thieves in the crowd." And he held up a roll of bills.

But Graeme proposed that he should give the hornpipe again, and the floor was cleared at once, for Nixon's hornpipe was very popular and tonight, of course, was in high favor. In the midst of his dance Nixon stopped short; his arms dropped to his sides; his face had a look of fear, of horror.

There, before him, in his riding cloak and boots, with his whip in his hand as he had come from his ride, stood Mr. Craig. His face was pallid, and his dark eyes were blazing with fierce light. As Nixon stopped, Craig stepped forward to him, and, sweeping his eyes round upon the circle, he said in tones intense with scorn:

"You cowards! You get a man where he's weak! Cowards! You'd damn his soul for his money!"

There was a dead silence, and Craig, lifting his hat, said solemnly:

"May God forgive you this night's work!"

Then, turning to Nixon and throwing his arm over his shoulder, he said in a voice broken and husky:

"Come on, Nixon! We'll go!"

Idaho made a motion as if to stop him, but Graeme stepped quickly forward and said sharply, "Make way there, can't you?" and the crowd fell back, and we four passed through, Nixon walking as in a dream, with Craig's arm about him. Down the street we went in silence and on to Craig's shack, where we found old man Nelson, with the fire blazing and strong coffee steaming on the stove. It was he that had told Craig, on his arrival from the Landing, of Nixon's fall.

There was nothing of reproach, but only gentlest pity, in tone and touch as Craig placed the half drunk, dazed man in his easy chair, took off his boots, brought him his own slippers and gave him coffee. Then, as his stupor began to overcome him, Craig put him in his own bed and came forth with a face written over with grief.

"Don't mind, old chap," said Graeme kindly.

But Craig looked at him without a word and, throwing himself into a chair, put his face in his hands. As we sat there in silence the door was suddenly pushed open, and in walked Abe Baker, with the words, "Where is Nixon?" and we told him where he was. We were still talking when again a tap came to the door, and Shaw came in looking much disturbed.

"Did you hear about Nixon?" he asked. We told him what we knew.

"But did you hear how they got him?" he asked excitedly.

As he told us the tale the men stood listening, with faces growing hard.

It appeared that after the making of the league the Black Rock hotel man had bet Idaho a hundred to fifty that Nixon could not be got to drink before Easter. All Idaho's schemes had failed, and now he had only three days in which to win his money, and the ball was his last chance. Here, again, he was balked, for Nixon, resisting all entreaties, barred his shack door and went to bed before nightfall, according to his invariable custom on pay days. At midnight some of Idaho's men came battering at the door for admission, which Nixon reluctantly granted. For half an hour they used every art of persuasion to induce him to go down to the ball, the glorious success of which was glowingly depicted, but Nixon remained immovable, and they took their departure, baffled and cursing. In two hours they returned drunk enough to be dangerous, kicked at the door in vain, finally gained entrance through the window, hauled Nixon out of bed and, holding a glass of whisky to his lips, bid him drink, but he knocked the glass away, spilling the liquor over himself and the bed.

It was drink or fight, and Nixon was ready to fight, but after a parley they had a drink all round and fell to persuading again. The night was cold, and poor Nixon sat shivering on the edge of his bed. If he would take one drink, they would leave him alone. He need not show himself so stiff. The whisky fumes filled his nostrils. If one drink would get them off, surely that was better than fighting and killing some one or getting killed. He hesitated, yielded, drank his glass. They sat about him amiably drinking and lauding him as a fine fellow after all. One more glass before they left; then Nixon rose, dressed himself, drank all that was left of the bottle, put his money in his pocket and came down to the dance wild with his old time madness, reckless of faith and pledge, forgetful of home, wife, babies, his whole being absorbed in one great passion—to drink and drink and drink till he could drink no more.

Before Shaw had finished his tale Craig's eyes were streaming with tears, and groans of rage and pity broke alternately from him.

Abe remained speechless for a time, not trusting himself, but as he heard Craig groan, "Oh, the beasts, the fiends!" he seemed encouraged to let himself loose, and he began swearing with the coolest and most bloodcurdling deliberation.

Craig listened with evident approval, apparently finding complete satisfaction in Abe's performance, when suddenly he seemed to waken up, caught Abe by the arm and said in a horror stricken voice:

"Stop! Stop! God forgive us! We must not swear like this."

Abe stopped at once and in a surprised and slightly grieved voice said:

"Why, what's the matter with that? Ain't that what you wanted?"

"Yes, yes. God forgive me! I am afraid it was," he answered hurriedly, "but I must not."

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

REV. GEO. R. STUART.

Mr. Editor.—Rev. Geo. R. Stuart, of Cleveland, Tenn., has just closed a great meeting at Epworth church, Norfolk. He has made us laugh, cry, think and pray. He is witty, wise, devout. I do not know a more lovable man or one more devoted to the Master's work. I have worked with a number of evangelists, but Bro. Stuart is the only one with whom I have gone through a meeting in which there was not some little word I would have wished not said or said otherwise. He has a playful, chaste, delightful humor, but there is nothing sensational about him. His coming to any church will be a benediction. I endorse him unqualifiedly. A great number, maybe one hundred and seventy-five or two hundred, came forward to the altar during our meeting. The "shake hand" conversion was not in evidence. The penitents knelt at the altar until satisfied of their acceptance with God. Epworth has seen scenes she never witnessed before. Our Norfolk brethren of the ministry united in joyful and faithful assistance. Our hearts are with Bro. Stuart, and our prayers follow him wherever he goes. God is using him to do a great work.

Yours truly,

R. H. BENNETT.

A WONDERFUL MEETING AND A PHENOMENAL SPEECH.

Mr. Editor.—The recent meeting at the Academy of Music in our city was so remarkable that I think it worthy of wide publication, and hence I send you the following excellent account of the meeting, written by Mr. W. F. Gregory, reporter for the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. Mr. Stuart's speech was one of the greatest oratorical triumphs I ever heard, and likewise a thunder blast against the saloon.

Yours truly, R. H. BENNETT.

Norfolk, Va., November 1, 1902.

A vast concourse filled the Academy of Music Sunday afternoon to hear Rev. George R. Stuart, of Cleveland, Tenn., who has been holding a series of meetings each day for more than a week at Epworth M. E. church, South.

At 3 o'clock, a half-hour before the appointed time of service, every seat on the main floor and first gallery was occupied, the private boxes filled and men crowding in at the doors of entrance.

At 3:30 o'clock the entire interior of the building was beset, hundreds standing in the aisles, while others crowded the stand of the orchestra, immediately in front of the stage, while a great throng crowded the rear of the stage, thus filling the building from pit to dome.

On the stage with Mr. Stuart were Rev. E. T. Dadmun, Rev. J. E. Cooke, of the Presbyterian church, Richmond, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, Rev. E. K. Odell, Rev. C. L. Bane, Dr. J. J. Hall and Rev. R. H. Bennett.

The following ministers and prominent citizens occupied the boxes: Rev. C. H. McGhee, Rev. J. K. Joliff, Rev. George H. McFaden, Rev. George Wesley Jones, Rev. G. H. Lambeth, ex-Mayor C. W. Pettit, Dr. L. Lankford, Messrs. B. T. Bockover, Russell Dawson, W. P. Dodson, Capt. George Phillips, Capt. George Hudson, S. N. Brickhouse, S. Q. Collins, L. W. White, Capt. J. T. Balton, W. B. Roper, and others.

No such gathering of men has assembled at a religious service since the days of Sam Small. It was an inspiring sight—2,500 men assembled to hear a discussion of the principles of the Gospel as applied to local affairs.

Many in the audience declared that if this body of men would stand as a unit for purity in politics and morality in every-day life they could control the city of Norfolk for righteousness and law and purity.

On the previous Sunday Mr. Stuart announced that he would deliver what he termed his "Stump Digger," but what thousands who have heard it say in reality is one of the most powerful and dramatic pleas for a practical application of the principles of Christianity that ever fell from the lips of man.

The singing was conducted by Rev. E. T. Dadmun, and after the rendition of several familiar Gospel hymns, in which the great audience united with a will, the music of which thrilled the vast crowd and prepared it for a reception of the great effort of Mr. Stuart which was to follow. After the singing prayer was offered by Rev. J. E. Cook, pastor of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church, Richmond.

Mr. Stuart said in advance of his sermon: I have not come here to pick a quarrel with you. If you are a drinking man, I have no fight with you. If you are a gambler, I have no fight with you.

I am here this afternoon to talk with you on a line that if you will listen to my lecture patiently and hear me through I shall be satisfied that you will go away from this place fully convinced of the truth of what I have told you.

Mr. Stuart then said that this meeting was not without expense. The building had to be paid for because you well know that the managers cannot let us have it for nothing, and then the committee of arrangements have undergone an expense of about $50 and I am going to take up a collection, not one dollar of which goes to me, but to defray the cost of this meeting. I want every man to give according to his size; if his size is a nickel, then just put in the nickel.

Mr. Stuart announced as his text, Habakkuk 2: 12, 15, 16—"Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood and establisheth a city by iniquity."

He said the text was a pronoun, but he would change it to a noun for the present occasion and let it read thus:

"Woe unto Norfolk city, that buildeth a town with blood and establisheth a city by iniquity. Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink and putteth the bottle to him and maketh him drunk also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness."

"Thou art filled with shame for glory; drink thou also and let thy forehead be uncovered; the cup of the Lord's right hand shall be turned unto thee and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory."

The speaker discussed our national dangers in a most striking and dramatic manner, rising at times to a height in eloquence that carried the vast audience with him with a storm of applause.

Mr. Stuart said if you are a saloon-keeper, a drinker of liquor, or if you rent a house to a saloon-keeper, God have mercy upon you, for there is nothing in this book (taking the Bible in hand) for you but woe, sorrow and calamity in the end.

I understand that you have a mayor who is trying to do what is right. I hope he is in the audience. May God bless him. (Great applause.) You have a police commissioner, a judge of the corporation court whom I am told is a nice man, but what is he if the jury turns these rascals loose? I shall lecture on politics and other matters, and leave this audience to judge. It's a fool of a philosopher who can give only a half judgment. How many of you are going to say amen? and there were several amens in the audience, and Mr. Stuart said: This is the smallest amen crowd I ever met.

The speaker made his subject the arraignment of the liquor business, his general head being "Our National Dangers," and discussed it under the following divisions: Anarchy, Strike Mobs, Political Corruption and Fraud, Poverty, Widows and Orphans.

He said the politician gives as a remedy for national dangers the free silver and gold questions, the national banks and the tariff, but he said these were all failures; none of them had ever placed the country upon a happy basis. What we want is a practical remedy—a Bible in one hand and baskets of bread in the other.

All over this country they are building cities with blood. Big, black clouds are hanging over this nation, and if you don't crush them they will crush you, and you can trace all these black clouds back to the beer keg and the whiskey barrel.

ANARCHY.

The first cloud I call your attention to is anarchy. In Chicago some years ago 100 policemen marched on the anarchists to put them down in that city, and many of you who hear me this afternoon know how it aroused the people in that great Western city.

SOME RESULTS OF ANARCHY.

I will give you some of the results of anarchy: In the past few years the heads of five nations have gone off by the hands of anarchists. President McKinley, one of the purest men and best Presidents of this country (tumultuous applause) was slain by the hand of an anarchist. (Continued applause for several minutes.)

The saloonist is the promoter of anarchy, and the saloon its mother. The leader of the New York anarchists is a saloon-keeper, and every anarchist in this country is a friend of the saloon.

If you vote for the saloons to be abolished they will be put down. The American ballot settles every question except the saloon. Every other business, whether it be the grocer, the shoe dealer, the dry goods merchant, the woolen and cotton manufacturers, all obey the law; but the saloon, which is fired with the spirit of the anarchist, rides rough shod over the country. All other branches of trade and industry close on the Sabbath day, but the sa-loonist defies law and says he will have his own way, and thus fired with the spirit of anarchy in his heart carries on his nefarious business on God's holy day, defying both the laws of God and man. And when you do close the saloon, then a lot of low down fellows who regard neither God's or man's rights, get together and form clubs and say we will beat you anyhow. "The judge who stands for rotten bums is these needs backbone. If I were judge I would set down heavy on them."

THE SPIRIT OF MOB LAW.

My next black cloud is the mob spirit. The records show that in one year there were 107 legal executions and 336 executions by mob law, showing that the mob spirit overleaps everything. The mob takes the law into its own hands and executes it. It makes home, society and the safety of our institutions.

ELECTION FRAUDS.

My next cloud is the election fraud. Throughout the country the saloon men influence elections. In this very city I am told, the saloonists control the elections, and to a very large extent compel men to vote for men for office who will wink at their violations of the laws. If these monsters are not downed they will destroy our freedom and God-given rights. They control politics and the politicians because the latter will in many instances for the sake of being retained in a fat office lean on their side.

Take President McKinley: He was a local Methodist preacher, and at all of his Conferences he would advocate prohibition and vote for prohibitive resolutions. Bryan, who is a good man, stumped his State for prohibition. Did either of them mention the saloons? No! Why not? I ask you why not? You know!

THEY WANTED VOTES.

A voice from the gallery: "They wanted votes."

As I have already stated, you have a mayor who wants to do his duty (applause). Give him backbone, give him backbone, shouted Mr. Stuart, who was followed by deafening applause.

Mr. Stuart said you have two mill one is the police mill. This pulls the violators in and the penalty is a fine what do they do, they appeal (great laughter), your judge and Commonwealth's attorney can settle the matter for these fellows if they desire to. They are tried by jury you need honorable and upright men on the jury will back up the judge and attorney and give the rascals the full benefit of the law. These saloons of hell must be down with the bloated politicians who follow in their wake and smell like sewerers.

DIVORCE LAW ATTACKED.

The speaker said the next black cloud is the divorce business. The New York journals are publishing opinions of distinguished men on the divorce question. I take this Bible with this book of books (holding up the Bible in his hand), for my opinion. The divorce laws are from hell, and the offspring of the devil, and are sending lots of people to perdition.

The divorce question can be traced to the saloon business. It tears down the ome and Christianity that takes care of the little ones. It is flooding the country with orphans, and it is the agger that is being plunged into the hearts of the American people and desolating their homes. Dash this knife down to earth, to hell, from whence it came. I want to help stamp this diabolical business out this afternoon. If there were ever folks who would run to hell for a dollar it is some of you Norfolk people.

The saloons strike at prosperity, and knock the common people out. What we need to do is to knock the saloon out. There are fourteen hundred millions of dollars in America. A large amount of this money is wasted in saloons. Liquor is eating up the blood raw. There is more money spent in the United States for intoxicating liquors than she derives from her exports and imports. More money is expended for liquor than have all the national banks. How much does it cost to make liquor by the gallon? 20 cents—the tax is $1.10; it sells at retail for 10 cents a drink, which is at the smallest figure $4 per gallon; 20 cents of the $4 goes to the farmer; the government, police, brewer, liquor dealer, almshouse and gamblers get the rest. For every dollar that the government gets out of the liquor traffic she has to pay out in return $26, a nice way to get revenue. The most diabolical institution in this country is the Liquor Dealers' Association. Why, at one of their meetings held not long ago one of its members had the audacity to say we must get the boys into the saloons and teach them the art of drinking. The old men are dying and we need new material on which to perpetuate our business. Yes, they would blight and blast the future homes of young America by decoying them into their hellish abodes and leading them to destruction, as they have been the means of leading thousands of others.

ANOTHER SALOON EVIL.

The saloon is the mother of the gambling spirit; you get full of booze in the saloon and bruised up in the gambling hell, and you go home to your wives in this condition. I have no respect for the gambler or the drunkard. It makes no difference with me what you play, poker, or anything else; if you get something for nothing you are a thief at heart (great applause). I have about as much respect for a thief as I have for a gambler. If you are a gambler, and don't like that, why you will have to take it. I'd as soon be a highwayman as a gambler. I understand that there is a Methodist in this city who rents the upper part of his place of business to a gambler. Is it so? I hope not; but if so, God pity him. Turning to a gentleman on the stage, Mr. Stuart said, have you a son, and he answered, I have. He is sixteen years old.

Would you rather he would have a bottle of liquor in his pocket or nothing?

He replied: "I would rather see him in rags than to see him with a bottle of liquor in his pocket."

The highway robber leaves you with nothing, the saloon-keeper leaves you with a bottle of liquor. The highway robber beats the saloon-keeper. I bow to the highway robber sooner than to the infamous saloon-keeper. Of what value is a stomach full of liquor?

Some one in the audience said: "A dollar in the police court," which created laughter.

Take a dollar and see what John can do with it drunk and sober. If drunk he goes home, and his wife Sally asks what he has. "A gallon," says John. "A gallon of what?" asks Sally, "molasses or vinegar?" "Naw," says John, in his drunken condition, "whiskey; and I am an American citizen. If you fool with me I will punch your head off." Take John sober. He buys a pair of shoes for little John. "What have you, John?" asks Sally, and he says, "I have a pair of shoes for little John." "Come here, John," says his mother, "for we all need them." John comes limping along for his shoes, for he has not had a pair on his feet the Lord only knows when, and the seat of his pants looks like the map of the United States. "What size do you wear?" the father asks, and John says, "I don't know, it has been so long since I had a pair." Sober John helps the storekeeper and the shoemaker that made the shoes.

You have more than a hundred of saloons in Norfolk, and thousands of drinkers. Take your dollar and buy the necessities of life. Here's the fees—down the American saloon, brighten your homes, buy food and clothing for the mothers and children.

Down with the American saloon—and rear upon its ruins the little American cottage or home. I tell you with sorrow, my audience, the saloon power in this city is the vote of the Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians of Norfolk. The saloon man says when the church people stop voting for me I will have to go out of my business forever. The raw material of the saloons are the boys of the mothers and fathers of Norfolk. The old soakers are dying off, and two hundred thousand boys are taking their places each year. The mills grind, and we pay the toll to the officers.

SAVE OUR WOMEN.

The United States sent men to San Juan to save the lives of Cuban women. More women in America have died as the result of liquor than there are women since God made the island of Cuba.

What is a boy good for unless he runs for office in Virginia? God save American citizenship. The saloon makes the drunkard, the law makes the saloon, the legislator makes the law, and the voter makes the legislator. If one goes to hell, all go there, or there is no justice in God Almighty.

If I should leave here and a saloon man says: "George Stuart, I don't like what you said," and plunges a knife into my body, I fall and a good brother comes to me and says: "Your blood is too good to waste, let my handkerchief catch it, and rest your head on my arm, the cobblestones are too cold," it does no good. Why wasn't he there to grab that arm? That knife is the whiskey demon—crush the arm before it falls. I prophesy that the citizens of this great America will grab the whiskey bottle and dash it under their feet.

The saloons must go, and as long as my breath lasts I will fight them down.

DRAMATIC INCIDENT.

At this stage of Mr. Stuart's sermon an incident occurred which has never before been witnessed in Norfolk. Mr. Stuart asked all in the audience who desired the overthrow of the saloon to take out their handkerchief and rise to their feet, and the whole assembly, numbering about 2,500 men, arose upon their feet spontaneously. Mr. Stuart said: "Now, if you want this country redeemed from the thralldom of the liquor curse, wave your handkerchiefs—the white banner of temperance, peace and prosperity"—and there was a sea of white, a scene of inspiration that can never be forgotten.

After singing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," Dr. Lankford suggested three cheers for Rev. George R. Stuart, and they were given with a will.

Mr. Stuart, cool as the bravest soldier on a field of battle, raised his hand and said: "Don't cheer me; crush the infernal saloons in Norfolk and then cheer for the homes made desolate by them."

At the close of the meeting Mr. Stuart was surrounded by many in the audience and showered with congratulations.

It was one of the greatest meetings ever held in Norfolk.

WEST BRUNSWICK CIRCUIT.

This pleasant charge is closing the year prosperously. The collections will be paid in full. This marks quite an advance over the past two years, as the deficit was much larger last year than it was the year before. I think the circuit will pay out on ministerial support. The great hail storm of last summer damaged and destroyed growing crops on the farms of our members to the extent of many thousand dollars. This fact makes the financial exhibit more gratifying to me. The entire tobacco crop was almost totally destroyed in some cases, but I know of no loser in that class who will make the storm an excuse for repudiating the Lord's claim.

I think the first public subscriptions taken for the Orphanage was from this circuit at our District Conference two years ago. Our people have this good work on their hearts, and will respond to it liberally.

Our protracted meetings were seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The number of conversions were not large. Something over forty conversions and reclamations. Twenty united with us on profession of faith. I did all the preaching at three of my churches, with the exception of a sermon at Macedonia by Bro. Seay, of the Baptist church, and a sermon at Lebanon by Bro. Havens, our efficient local preacher. At Rocky Run church, Bro. Bascom Dey and Bro. Owen, of the Disciples' church, did the preaching. All these brethren named preached and wrought well.

Bishops, itinerants, editors, laymen many, are all discussing the question: "Why do not we have more conversions and report more accessions on profession of faith." Most of the answers that I have seen assume that there is a decline of spiritual power in the pulpit and in the pew. One fact seems to be ignored that ought to have place and great prominence in every answer to that question. It is this: In many places we have scarcely any sinners to convert. God has already converted them. They are already in the churches. In some communities almost the whole mass is leavened. It is notably so in this community. Excepting a few hardened "moral" cases—such as you will find in all our communities—nearly all the people excepting the very youngest children, are housed in the various church homes. For years this circuit has been and is garnering its sheaves mainly from the glorious field of childhood.

The old dining-room and kitchen at the parsonage have been torn down, and two spacious, new rooms replace them. There are new porches and pantries. The old far-away well has been abandoned, and a new one stands within a few feet of the kitchen door. The main building is newly roofed, and an upper room added. The chamber, or living room, has been made over new, and is "a thing of beauty," as well as a place of comfort. The improvements anticipate an outlay of $500. A feature of this circuit is its parsonage society, organized by Bro. and Sister DeBerry. It did and is doing excellent work. We have secured and have on hand enough money to put new furniture in the new rooms. The members of our Building Committee are Bros. Samuel Barrow, Herbert Barrow, Geo. Barrow, and A. T. Abernathy. Former pastors of this charge know that these brethren enterprise to success everything they undertake. We have now one of the most commodious and well appointed parsonages in our Conference. And this is one of the most desirable charges in the Conference for any pastor whose financial circumstances enable him to live, without continuous tension and pressure, upon the salary paid here. There is no missionary appropriation to supplement the salary, as is the case in some country charges of about the same grade and pay. The truth is, these dear people could easily have raised this to a first grade circuit financially, had they so willed, some years ago. Perhaps they could now. But not so easily as in the past. More and more of our young people are seeking the cities. Industrial centres are taking whole families away. Blackstone will absorb one-eighth of the assessed financial strength of Macedonia next year. But this circuit is first grade in every sense except the financial. It has a very intelligent membership. And no charge has a larger proportion of good noble people than this charge of West Brunswick.

J. R. STURGIS.

October 28, 1902.

Sunday being the dedication of the new Central church Portsmouth, there was a great turnout of the people at both morning and evening services. The dedicatory discourse was delivered by Bishop John C. Granbery at 11 A. M., who also preached at night. A collection was taken up to defray the balance of the indebtedness on the new edifice, and $3,200 was raised.

LESSON VII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 16.

Text of the Lesson. Judg. II, 7-19.
Memory Verses. 18, 19—Golden Text,
Ps. cxli, 19—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1900, by American Press Association.]
7 And the people served the Lord all the days of Joshua and all the days of the elders that survived Joshua.

So it is also written in Josh. xxiv, 31, and it seems to be given as a reason for this that they had seen all the great works of the Lord that He did for Israel. But now we come to a different story. The book of Joshua tells of victory in the land. This book tells of sin, judgment, repentance and deliverance. Their sin was disobedience in making a league with the heathen rather than manifesting the true God, the God of Israel to them. The great sin of those who bear the name of Christ today is that instead of being separated unto Him and honoring Him they are in league with the world lying in the wicked one (1 John v, 19; Rom. xii, 1, 2).

8-10. There arose another generation after them which knew not the Lord nor yet the works which He had done for Israel.

Joshua and all that generation having passed away from this present scene, their successors must have known of the Lord, who brought their fathers into the promised land, but they had no heart for Him. They did not like His ways, His righteousness, His dominion over them. Like their descendants long afterward, they acted as if their hearts said, "Speak unto us smooth things; prophesy deceits; cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us" (Isa. xxx, 10, 11). They are represented today by a vast multitude of churchgoers, many of them church members, who will not endure sound doctrine (1 Tim. iv, 3), yet profess loyalty to Christ. They profess that they know God, yet in works they deny Him.

11-13. They forsook the Lord and served Baal and Ashtaroah.

The Lord God who brought them out of the land of Egypt, who led them through the Red sea on dry land, who overthrew the host of the Egyptians, their enemies, who fed them with manna all through the wilderness journey, who divided Jordan before them and gave them the good land with vineyards and olive yards and homes for which they labored not—God, who did all this for them and gave them life and breath and all things, Him they forsook and fell into the idolatry of the people round about them, who knew not God. Thus they worship demons and not God (1 Cor. x, 20; Deut. xxxii, 17), for it is the devil who turned Adam and Eve from God and even asked the Son of God to worship him, who is back of all this turning away from God and His truth and His worship and who is working so hard in our day in many theological seminaries and pulpits to turn people away from God.

14, 15. Whithersoever they went out the hand of the Lord was against them for evil, as the Lord had said, "... and they were greatly distressed.

The testimony of one of their rulers about a thousand years after this was, "The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him, but His power and His wrath is against all them that forsake Him" (Ez. viii, 22). In Lev. xxvi and Deut. xxviii God gave an abundant warning as to what He would do if they forsook Him, but for all this they sinned still and believed not for His wondrous works. They believed not in God and trusted not in

His salvation (Is. lxxviii, 32, 33). The whole Bible teaches that since sin entered the carnal mind is enmity against God; the heart is deceitful and desperately wicked; every imagination of his heart is only evil continually (Rom. viii, 7; Jer. xvii, 9; Gen. vi, 5).

16. Nevertheless the Lord raised up judges which delivered them out of the hand of those that spoiled them.

We have just referred to the wonderful sinfulness of man and his rebellion against God, but the Bible is full of the more wonderful love of God, who loved us even when we were dead in sins, who commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us (Eph. ii, 4, 5; Rom. v, 8). That "God is Love" is the great foundation truth of Scripture, and, being such, He is not willing that any should perish (1 John iv, 8, 16; 1 Pet. iii, 9). Many a time He turned His anger away from this people, and, being full of compassion, He forgave their iniquity and destroyed them not (Ps. lxxviii, 38). He sought and found Adam and Eve when in their sin they turned away from Him, and He has ever since been seeking and saving the lost.

17-19. They ceased not from their own doings nor from their stubborn way.

With many sinnings and repentings they went from bad to worse. "They mocked the messengers of God and despised His words and misused His prophets until the wrath of the Lord arose against His people till there was no remedy" (11 Chron. xxxvi, 16). Very long He bore with them, but finally He sent them into captivity for seventy years. After He restored them from Babylon and they again became a people, though not as before, He sent to them His own Son, but they rejected Him and crucified Him, and now they are scattered among all nations until He shall come again in His glory, and then they will receive Him and be a righteous nation from that time forth. They will blossom and bud and fill the face of the earth with fruit (Matt. xxiii, 38, 39; Isa. xxv, 8; xxvii, 6; lx, 21). How wonderful is the purpose of God and how sure of fulfillment (Isa. xiv, 24; Ps. xxxiii, 11). How much of heaven upon earth every child of God might have if only willing to walk humbly with Him! (Deut. xi, 21; Ps. lxxxi, 13-16.) We enter into rest when we cease from our own works.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic for the Week Beginning Nov. 16, "Present Opportunities For Methodist Missions"—Text, Matt. xxviii, 19; Phil. iii, 7, 12, 16.

Opportunities are sometimes best measured by obstacles removed. Our present condition, with its doors wide open, may well be contrasted with the situation a few years since. Our people of middle age clearly recall how matters stood in 1857, the great revival year.

William Butler was in India. He was a lone pioneer in the far north-west provinces, hostile, bigoted, heathen millions surrounding him, armed and thirsting for blood, in a few weeks to sweep with billows of fire and blood the whole vast peninsula from snow capped Himalayas to the tropic ocean in the effort to exterminate Christianity and British dominion.

In the great empire of China we had work on a small scale in a few places only, while the land as a whole was fast closed against us and almost unknown. Japan had not yet awakened from her feudalism, and foreigners were permitted to land in but two or three ports. Korea was as little known as the south pole is today. Africa was unexplored except a narrow fringe around the coast. We had some work in Buenos Ayres, in South America, but Mexico was not to be entered until after our civil war. We had some work in Europe, but it was small and carried forward under hampering restrictions.

Now India is everywhere feeling the impulse of Christian thought and work. Years since one of our bishops returning from there declared that if Christianity was blotted out from every other land on earth there was vitality enough in India Methodism to restore it and evangelize the world. Japan is passing through a revival of religion which has swept the whole empire as the revival of 1857 swept the United States. Korea and China, the Philippines, the far strait of Malacca, Burma and even Borneo are in the full light of the gospel. Africa is open from circumference to center and feels the new life. Our Spanish speaking work is most notable and encouraging. So much for the fields. In 1857 the church prayed God to open the closed doors. He has marvelously answered that prayer. The bars are down.

In 1859 our missionary secretaries advertised for several months in our church papers for two men for the foreign work, and no one offered. In 1869 Dr. Edward Parker of India appealed to some of our conferences for young men to go back with him, and none went. Now there are several hundred of the choicest spirited and best equipped of our young people of both sexes ready to go anywhere they may be needed.

We have in all our past been hindered in our progress by lack of funds. Our people have been among the poor. This is also largely changed. Lands in city and country have increased in value and made many rich; mines, oil wells, farming, trading, manufacturing, commerce, stocks and thrift in a hundred directions have brought wealth until we have a superabundance. Much has been consecrated. More will be. Our young people will be richer than their fathers. We believe they will not be less devoted. Opportunities become necessities. We believe they will be seen and the Lord's work grandly advanced.

Divided Confidences.

The poverty of the individual life and the abortive efforts of the church are largely due to divided confidence. A full faith is essential to a well rounded character. Division here means a halting feebleness and a hesitating performance of clearly defined duties. This way lies safety. Ships in time of storm need sea room, and their masters commit themselves with confidence to the vast deep. The inexperienced might long for a sight of land, but the captain knows the treachery of the shore. The soul for its development and safety must commit itself with a true heart in full assurance of faith to Christ. He is strong enough and lasting enough to be worthy of a whole heart for all time.—Episcopal Recorder.

Thoughts.

Even the lion must lower himself before victoriously attacking.

With men we can afford to be children sometimes; with God we must be children always.

Man is satisfied if he has done good. God is not satisfied until he has done well.

Who wishes to avoid pain must take pains.

The heart should always be open, the ears often, the mouth seldom.—Christian Endeavor World.

Can Never Grow Old.

We have a gospel which can never grow old. Its adaptation to the deepest needs of men's souls remains constant with these needs. People tell us the gospel has done its work; that the world has outgrown it. We are confident, with a confidence born of our knowledge, that as long as men live by bread so long will this word, which proceedeth out of the mouth of God, be the food of our souls.—A. Maclure

So Does He Look Upon Us.

As one who sees and knows us altogether, as one who understands the nature of sin and its unhappy results, as one who remembereth that we are dust, as one who loves purity and hates sin, as one who made us and loved us and gave Himself for us, so does the Lord look upon us. It is out of His very strong character that His pity and love and mercy and our salvation come.—Independent.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Procrastination is the thief of souls.—Rev. N. H. Lee, Methodist, Denver.

A Reasonable Service.

Religion is a reasonable service.—Rev. G. R. Stair, Baptist, Brooklyn.

Results of Intoxication.

More than one-half of crime is due to intoxication.—Rev. J. H. Zinn, Lutheran, Akron, O.

God's Discipline Merciful.

God's severest discipline is always merciful.—Rev. Dr. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

Thunderbolts of Omnipotence.

You cannot expect to weigh the thunderbolts of omnipotence in an apothecary's balances.—The Late Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

Fundamental Law of Being.

Vicarious sacrifice is not only a great truth of theology, but it is a fundamental law of being.—Rev. A. B. Kingsolving, Episcopal, Brooklyn.

The Need of Action.

What we need is action. The glory of the Lord depends upon those who will take hold and move forward.—Rev. A. C. Ward, Baptist, Atlanta.

Trusting Fellow Men.

No man can find the true God anywhere among the principles that actuate men who distress their fellows.—Rev. W. D. Downey, Methodist, Philadelphia.

Not Merely Blind Assent.

To believe is not a blind assent of the mind to an unintelligible truth, but a most rational and manly intellectual function.—Rev. Father Michael, Catholic, Pittsburg.

The Mission of Sorrow.

Unless one has known sorrow one can never know joy, and unless one has seen the shadow one will never know the light.—Rev. Dr. Eaton, Baptist, Cleveland, O.

Secret of Greatness.

To give oneself to a cause, to be ready to sacrifice to that cause self and everything connected with self, is the secret of greatness.—Rev. Dr. Alsop, Episcopalian, Brooklyn.

The Function of Religion.

The function of religion is to enrich and deepen life, to make it more mellow and more beautiful, more full of satisfaction and inspiration.—Rev. F. H. Hinckley, Unitarian, Philadelphia.

Founded In Reason.

Every truth at the foundation of Christian faith is reasonable. Not all can be discovered by reason, but when once discovered they are compatible.—Rev. S. C. Leavell, Methodist, Chicago.

A Dishonor to the Church.

Some in the church, by their unholy and inconsistent lives, are a dishonor to the church and unfit for use. God cannot use them. The Christian is one who is made clean and set apart for the use of the Master.—Rev. Dr. Holderby, Presbyterian, Atlanta, Ga.

Aim of Christian Efforts.

No man can win a worthy prize without a tremendous effort. The prize is the reward of victory. Moral likeness to Christ ought to be the aim of all Christian efforts. To dream of the glory and felicity of heaven is our privilege.—Rev. G. B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver.

Spiritualizing the Mind.

When the mind is spiritualized, the kingdom of God will stand revealed, and we shall all become partakers of the divine nature, discovering that in the kingdom of God all are gods. By the incarnation of the Christ elements and purposes is man made perfect.—Rev. F. E. Mason, Spiritualist, Brooklyn.

Operation of Divine Grace.

The operation of divine grace is exceptional. There are penalties affixed to the violation of all laws. This is true of the laws of nature, of health and of God. But by the mystery of the cross even the condemned is forgiven and the guilty goes free.—Rev. Dr. Wilson, Methodist, Danbury, Conn.

The Mission of Suffering.

Suffering comes to unveil character, to disclose the real motives and purpose of one's inner self. It brings about a demonstration of the powers of God under conditions most adverse and distressing as seen in the indestructible integrity of those who trust him.—Rev. Dr. Landrum, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

The Wider Goal.

He alone lives wisely, with ever widening hope and courage and strength, who sees beyond the moment to the wider goal toward which he moves and in the light of which every step he takes wins a wider and nobler meaning. That nation alone is great whose policy is born of wide and noble dreams.—Rev. W. H. Pulsford, Episcopalian, Chicago.

Breaking a Friendly Stone.

An old custom was for friends to write their names on stones and break them, each taking a part that would match the other and always vouch the identity of him who presented it. Who now offers to break a friendly stone with us? It is the Christ himself. That will be the happiest day in heaven when we can match the white stone Jesus gives us and be called his personal friend.—Rev. Dr. Alonzo Monk, Methodist, Atlanta.

Clearing Away Misconception.

Our intellectual tread will be the firmer for clearing away one misconception. The reason craves for certainty and all convincing proofs of immortality. It is not enough that we guess and hope. We want to prove immortality from the viewpoint of science. It seems not unreasonable that if God makes his earthly child to live in this physical realm he may desire to have him continue to live in another life. Many things strengthen the hope. God dwells in eternity, not in that brief moment of time named seventy years.—Rev. Dr. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

The Union Central

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT PASSED BY THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE YOUNG WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA.

Whereas in the all-wise providence of our Heavenly Father there has been removed from our midst Miss Eloise Richardson, the strength and grace of whose character was an inspiration to all with whom she came in contact; therefore be it

Resolved, That while our hearts are bowed with grief at our loss, they are also filled with gratitude for the beautiful life she lived among us, and that we will strive to emulate her example of unselfishness and untiring devotion to duty.

That she will be sorely missed in the ranks of the Young Woman's Christian Association work, where she labored so efficiently.

That we extend to the family our sympathy in the great loss we so deeply share.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the home of our deceased friend, to Raidolph-Macon Institute, to the Methodist Recorder for publication, also that they be spread upon the minutes of the Executive Committee of the State Association.

CHESTNUT AVENUE CHURCH.

At an important meeting of the Official Board of Chestnut Avenue Methodist church last Tuesday evening encouraging reports were made on the state of the church, showing very decided improvement under the ministrations of the present preacher, Rev. J. T. Routten. Over one hundred have been added to church membership during the year. The spiritual trend is upward and onward. The financial shape is said to be better than in the history of the church. The latent forces are being well organized, and the outlook is very hopeful. The present pastor is held in high esteem, and the people desire the continuance of his labors among them, as is indicated by this quotation from a personal letter addressed to their presiding elder, Rev. Dr. J. Powell Garland, and signed by the entire Official Board—viz.: "In view of the facts, conditions, and needs of the work here, and having investigated the sentiment and wish of the church at large, we urgently request you to use your best endeavors to secure the reappointment of Rev. J. T. Routten to this charge, believing that the best success and prosperity of our Zion here depends upon compliance with this request."

Religious News.

Rev. Joseph Langley, pastor of St. James' M. E. church, will, at the November Conference give up his charge. He and Mrs. Langley will go to Nashville, her old home, where they will remain for a part of the year of rest Mr. Langley will take.—Leader.

An interesting protracted service was carried on all last week at Olive Branch, Rev. Mr. Cooper, of Clarksville, very ably assisted by Revs. H. H. Robertson and Tinsley Thrift. There were 25 conversions and 15 added to their membership.—Prospect Examiner.

Rev. Mr. Page filled the pulpit for Rev. T. J. Wray, at the M. E. church on Sunday night. Mr. Wray has made many and life-long friends during the two years he has been in charge of this circuit, and all regret that his health has been such that he shall request, at the coming Conference, to be given churches in the mountains. We all trust that wherever he be located he shall soon regain health and strength once so characteristically his.—Virginia Citizen.

Bishop Morrison's presidency of our Conference won for him golden opinions on every hand. He was firm, but kind; quick, but painstaking; witty, but courteous. He pushed business without being in a hurry. Calls of "Vote, vote," had no effect upon him as he took care to let every man speak who wanted to speak. In the pulpit he was practical, strong and tender. In the cabinet he was careful and considerate, seeming to have but a purpose to do the best for the Church first, for the men second. In the social circle he makes it easy for everybody. "Holston will be glad to have him come again."—Midland Methodist.

The Fourth Quarterly Conference of Appomattox circuit for this year was pleasantly held at Trinity church on October 22d, preceded by the Lord's Supper and an excellent sermon by Rev. Paul Whitehead, D. D. The reports were good, except some arrearage on ministerial support. This will doubtless be collected by the adjourned meeting to be held at Memorial church on November 10th at 11 o'clock. The circuit will perhaps make, in some respects, the best report at Annual Conference this year it has made in its history. By Annual Conference on the 12th of November this circuit will have raised in cash over $2,000 during the past twelve months. There has also been a net increase of 41 members during the year.—Appomattox Times.

HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

Mrs. W. J. Young returned yesterday afternoon from West Appomattox where she attended the annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Lynchburg district. It was the first district meeting of the society ever held. Among the delegates present were Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Wall, of Farmville, and Mrs. Young and Mrs. J. W. Stiff, of Lynchburg. The session of the society, which was held in the Memorial Methodist church at West Appomattox, began yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, and came to a close yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock.

Reports from seven auxiliaries were received and adopted, and a most instructive and helpful paper was read by Mrs. Wall. It was altogether a most profitable meeting, and was greatly enjoyed by both the delegates and the large number of residents of Appomattox who were present.—News.

COURT STREET DEDICATION.

The arrangement of the programme for the formal dedication of the new Court Street Methodist church is progressing rapidly, and in all probability will be completed in the early future. In addition to the ministers already secured for the ceremony, it is now announced that Bishop H. C. Morrison, who has frequently visited and preached in Lynchburg, will be present and deliver one of the sermons. Bishop Morrison is an able and eloquent preacher, and the opportunity to hear him will afford the people of Lynchburg a rare treat. As has already been stated, Bishop Granbery, of Ashland, who was at the dedication of the old church fifty-one years ago, will also be in attendance, and will preach probably at the morning service. All the surviving former pastors of Court Street church are expected to be present, and each one of them, it is expected, will take some part in the ceremony.—News.

LOTS PAID FOR.

Messrs. Deal, Holt and Huston, the buying committee of the Park Place new Methodist church, made the final payment on the four lots purchased on the corner of Granby and Thirty-first streets yesterday, and secured the deed for the same from the original owner. The deed will be recorded in the clerk's office to-day.

The way being clear, the building committee will proceed at once to erect the Sunday school and lecture room, which will be completed, if possible, by the first of the new year.

The Virginian-Pilot several weeks ago gave a full description of the new structure, the main auditorium of which will be commenced early next spring, so as to have it finished before the meeting of the Virginia Conference in November, 1903.

The congregation will be organized at once, and Bishop Duncan will be requested to send them a pastor at the Conference, which meets in Richmond on the 12th of November, 1902.—Virginian-Pilot.

FINE MEN'S MEETING.

Rev. Dr. H. C. Morrison delivered three memorable discourses at Trinity Methodist church yesterday to congregations that packed the sacred edifice to the doors. The afternoon service was for men only, and the great throng of men, from the youth to the gray-haired, bent form of those now nearing life's sunset, were thrilled by the soul-stirring discourse on "A Head End Collision," the service being under the auspices of the Railroad Y. M. C. A. Perhaps a score and a half of manly men sought the altar of prayer and professed conversion.

At night Dr. Morrison delivered what was unanimously conceded to be one of the most forceful sermons to the unsaved that has been heard in Richmond. For an hour and twenty-five minutes he pictured the awfulness of sin and the judgment, and in conclusion besought the people with pathos and in tears to seek salvation, many accepting the invitation and bowing at the altar.

To-night the eloquent preacher will discuss the second coming of Christ and to-morrow night will deliver his final discourse on the subject, "Christ's Power to Save From All Sin."—Leader.

SILVER WEDDING AT RANDOLPH-MACON.

The spacious home of President R. E. Blackwell was the centre of a large gathering of the citizens of Ashland and the student body of Randolph-Macon College last night to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the wedding of President and Mrs. Blackwell. From 5 to 8 o'clock a reception was tendered to the married folks of the town, and thereafter the younger people and the students had the right of way.

President and Mrs. Blackwell were the recipients of a large number of beautiful presents, including many handsome pieces of silver from the faculty and the many friends of the couple. The home was decorated with the choicest cut flowers and a profusion of autumn foliage. Mrs. Blackwell, who was Miss Epia Duncan, the daughter of Dr. James A. Duncan, one of Randolph-Macon's most noted presidents, was attired in her wedding gown. She was assisted in receiving by a number of the matrons of Ashland, and a Levy of beautiful young girls from the town and vicinity. Shortly after 9 o'clock the students of the college paid their respects to their president and his wife. Many of the Richmond alumni of the college were present during the evening, and the occasion was one of the most delightful in the social annals of the town. In the dining-room, which was decorated in chrysanthemum effect, a collation of light refreshments was served throughout the evening.

AT HIGH STREET CHURCH.

The services at High Street M. E. church yesterday were of an intensely interesting character. A large number were present in the Sunday school and the enthusiasm and interest created by the banner contest was indeed remarkable.

For many years it has been the custom of the school to devote the collection for the month of October to missions. The class that raised the largest amount of money for that purpose is awarded a beautiful banner, which it holds for a period of twelve months. In this way a pleasant rivalry is excited among the classes, and a considerable sum of money is raised for missions. On yesterday the offering for missions for the past month was $118.87, the largest amount ever raised by the school for this purpose. The class that received the banner was that of Mr. J. J. Westmoreland, it having raised $41.

The services in the church at 11 o'clock were very effective and profitable. At the close of the morning service the pastor extended the invitation for penitents, and four grown people presented themselves at the altar and professed conversion. The communion service, which followed, was pervaded by a deep religious feeling. Almost everyone was manifestly affected, and all seemed conscious of the overshadowing presence of the Most High.

At night the pastor, Rev. Geo. E. Booker, preached to a large and attentive congregation on the Transfiguration of Christ.—Petersburg Progress.

REOPENING OF CLAY STREET.

The reopening of the Clay Street Methodist church yesterday was an event of no little interest and importance to the Methodists of the community.

At services held in the morning and at night the pulpit was occupied by Bishop A. Coke Smith, so well known and greatly beloved here. His two sermons were models of excellence and were heard by great congregations. Bishop Smith is one of the most attractive speakers in the entire Methodist Church, and he is always a great favorite in this city. His presence at the Clay Street church yesterday added no little to an already auspicious event.

In the afternoon at 3:30 o'clock a rally was held. Many of the Methodist ministers of the city were present and participated in the exercises. Several addresses were delivered. Among the speakers were Dr. H. E. Johnson, of Laurel Street; Dr. John Hannon, of Union Station; the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, of Broad Street; and Dr. W. W. Lear, of Centenary. Other ministers were present on the pulpit.

The music was an attractive feature of the exercises. Under the direction of the chorister, Mr. R. E. Jones, the following programme was rendered: "Thee Will We Worship" (Porter) off. Sing Alleluia Forth (Buck) Postlude (Organ).

The Clay Street church is now one of the most attractive in the city. The entire auditorium has been remodeled, and a new organ has been erected.

The auditorium is a thing of beauty. The entire room has been remodelled. In the rear of the church, a new furnace room has been built, which contains new appliances for heating. Immediately above this room is the choir, which occupies the beautiful archway in the rear of the pulpit. The ceiling is of the latest pattern in steel and the harmonizing of this, with all else, is exceedingly noticeable. A new pipe organ takes the place of the small one, which has been in use for years. The gallery, which heretofore extended nearly to the centre of the room, has been dispensed with to a large degree, which improves the aptle. In place of the old straight benches, new hardwood circular pews are introduced, and the pulpit and chancel are entirely new. The painting and decorating are exquisite. A new carpet covers the floor, and the pulpit furnishings are all upholstered in green plush, which is in keeping with the carpet and decorations in general. In fact, it is doubtful if there is another church in the city where everything harmonizes to a greater degree, or that has a more attractive audience room than this one.—Leader.

NEXT CONFERENCE.

On the 12th instant, just nine days from to-day, the Virginia Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will convene in its one hundred and twentieth session in Broad Street church, Richmond.

There has been some speculation as to what changes might possibly occur in the pastors of this city and vicinity, but none of these speculations are founded upon facts so far as Norfolk city is concerned. It is generally conceded that the only change will be at Epworth church, which is the result of a transfer from the St. Louis Conference in the person of the Rev. Dr. R. D. Smart, which transfer was made several weeks ago by Bishop Duncan, who is to preside over the Virginia Conference, with the consent of the Bishop who is to preside over the St. Louis Conference and the preacher transferred. It is also considered that Rev. R. H. Bennett, who he is to succeed, will go to one of the best appointments in the bounds of the Conference. His brethren in the ministry are unanimous in the opinion that Mr. Bennett is one of the best equipped young ministers, and that as a sermonizer he has few equals and no superiors.

Mr. Bennett has a host of friends in Norfolk among his own and other denominations who hold him in the highest esteem, and will part with him very reluctantly. If a change were possible with any of the other Methodist churches in Norfolk it is known that Mr. Bennett would be most acceptable to one of these churches. But such an event is not probable, as no contingency has arisen to bring about such a change.

Rev. W. R. Proctor, who is serving out his third year at McKendree church, will be returned because his pastorate has been one of marked success, and it is known that his church will send up a strong petition for his return, coupled with the fact that McKendree has the reputation of being a loyal church, and always keeps whoever is sent to her as pastor the full four years.

Rev. George Wesley Jones, now serving out his third year at Trinity, will be returned to Norfolk if not to Trinity to the new Park Place congregation, which is about to erect a handsome edifice at a cost of $15,000, as it is reported that the Park Place Methodists will make a strong effort to get him. It is due to the efforts of Mr. Jones that the Methodists are to have a church in Park Place.

There is no doubt of the return of Rev. Graham H. Lambeth to LeKies Memorial church, who is now serving out the third year of one of the most successful pastorates in the history of that church. His people are unanimous for his return.

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presby-
terian Church, Chicago

Chicago. An inspiring and picturesque view of the Christian life of service and self denial is presented by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage in the discourse on the text Psalm cxxvi. 6. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Almost every home is adorned with companion pictures. If upon one side of the room there is hung a crucifixion scene, upon the other side of the room we want a picture of "The First Easter Morn." If upon one side we see the wayward boy gathering all together and taking his journey into a far country, upon the other side we want to see the returning prodigal being welcomed home by a forgiving father. If upon one side of the room we hang a picture of the twilight, upon the other side we want to see the picture of the dawn. If John Hevenden paints "The Breaking of the Home Ties," he feels that his life would be incomplete unless he also paints "The Bringing Home of the Bride." John Milton's "Paradise Regained" is a natural outgrowth of his "Paradise Lost." Dante's "Heaven" is a natural sequence to his "Purgatory" and his "Hell."

So this morning the sermon which I preach from the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Psalm of David is a companion sermon to the one recently delivered upon the text, "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." It has a companion text chosen on account of its vivid contrast. The text is selected to prove that the Christian sower has a right to expect his gospel harvest fields to be stacked high with golden sheaves of many blessings, to expect his seed to bring forth some thirty, some sixty and some a hundred fold. It is the picture of a Christian worker garnering the sheaves of his Christ love. It is the symbol of reward, the symbol of glorified hope and joy. It is the sweeter text because in it we hear the triumphant songs of heaven instead of the bitter sobs of despair.

A precious sheaf, garnered by the Christian sower and reaper, is the joyful realization that by his personal acts he has been made the human means in the divine hands through which immortal souls have been saved by Christ. There is a natural desire inborn in almost every human heart to help those who are in trouble and who cannot help themselves.

The Desire to Help Others.

If the lookout sights a shipwrecked vessel, the captain does not have to compel unwilling sailors to lower the lifeboat and pull away to save the perishing. No. All that the mate has to do is to call for volunteers, and, though the sailors may feel the waves are having their worst fit of temper, they will lower the lifeboat and pull away until the last man is taken from the doomed ship. When the little band of English men, women and children were imprisoned, during the Indian mutiny, in the residency of Lucknow, Havelock, with his few regiments, had to fight his way through a hundred thousand men. He had to march a thousand miles through a country swarming with cutthroats, and when the English soldiers' courage and strength showed signs of wavering Havelock roused them with this simple sentence: "Men, would you dare stop or turn back when helpless women and children are dying and must be saved?" There is in almost every man's heart a desire to help those who cannot help themselves. The same kind of a desire that drove Henry M. Stanley into the dark continent to rescue David Livingstone and Emin Pasha. The same kind of a desire which made Commander Schley turn his ships' prows northward to rescue the arctic explorer Greely and his companions. It is the same kind of desire which inspired the United States government to declare war against Spain in behalf of suffering and bleeding Cuba.

Now, as joy is nothing more or less than the pleasant emotion produced in the heart by the gratification of any desire, as we have shown in reference to the physical man, that the desire to help those who are helpless is implanted in almost every heart, what greater joy could come to the Christian reaper than the realization that he has been made instrumental in the saving of a soul? What earthly joy can be compared to the holy exaltation that comes to us when we realize that by prayers and pleadings we have been able to bring a sinner face to face with Christ? What greater joy than to realize that our humble efforts have been blessed to the saving of a soul which will live on and on through the coming ages, on and on through eternities, on and on until at last the lights of the stars shall be snuffed out and time shall be no longer? Only the other day I read of a man who, at great personal risk to himself, was lowered by a rope from the top of a twelve story building in order to rescue a little kitten which had fallen into one of the rain gutters. If a man could find joy in risking his life to save a kitten from starvation, surely there must be infinite joy to the Christian's heart when he realizes that not one, but many, immortal souls have been won to Christ and to eternal safety and happiness through his efforts, which God has so richly blessed.

So, on account of this transcendent joy, we find that soul saving has become a passion with some men. Just as the mechanic's wife, who has a little back yard, digs and plants and hoes and hovers over her gardens because she loves flowers and never tires of her beds filled with pansies and sweet peas and geraniums and narcissus and nasturtiums, so the true Christian loves men and women in order to win them to Christ. The city missionary goes down into the back alley for this one purpose. He climbs the dark tenement. There he finds a drunken husband and father, and as the city missionary looks upon that loathsome, filthy mass of human corruption he says to himself: "If I can only plant the gospel seed in that man's heart, it may save him. Yes, by the help of God, it will save him." And, as the mechanic's wife cares for her flowers, so that missionary cares for that soul diseased by sin. He prays with the sinner; he reads the Bible to him. After awhile the man confesses Christ and signs the temperance pledge. Then the city missionary helps this man, who was once enslaved by sin, to find work. Then he sees him bring his wages home. He sees him buy shoes for his children's feet and food for the table. Then he sees those children sent to the day schools and gathered into the Sunday schools. Then after awhile the city missionary sees the father, with his wife and children, all standing before the mercy seat and joining the church, and as the missionary's eyes fill with tears he says, "He is saved!" By the power of the Holy Spirit not only one soul, but a whole family of immortal souls, are saved. Ah, there is no joy on earth like the rapturous joy of soul saving! It is one of the most precious sheaves ever garnered by the Christian worker. My brother, if you have not this passion for saving souls you have not yet been blessed with the holiest joy of which the human heart can conceive.

Another precious sheaf that is garnered by the Christian reaper is the gratitude of those whose immortal souls he has been able, by the power of the Holy Spirit, to win to Christ. No true Christian has a right to swerve one inch from the path of rectitude in order to win the approbation of his fellow men. He should be willing to do his full duty under all conditions. No matter what obstacles may confront him, he should be willing to draw the plumb line of principle and go straight ahead whether he is praised or blamed, loved or hated, honored or despised.

But when a Christian worker can sow the good seed and not only gather for Christ a harvest of immortal souls, but gather also the gratitude and love of those whom he has been able, by the power of the Holy Ghost, to lead to salvation, the reward of that love is very sweet. It is as sweet as the attention which Mr. D. L. Moody used to shower upon a little old woman, popularly called Mother Cook, whose prayers were the means of giving to Mr. Moody a spirit filled life—a little old woman whom perhaps you have never heard of, yet a woman whom the whole Christian world ought to love on account of the work she has done. It is as sweet as the affection which a Sunday school scholar gives to his teacher because that teacher has led him to Christ. It is as sweet as the look of gratitude which the dying man turns upon one who has pointed him to the cross and to divine pardon. It is as sweet as the affection which a child showers upon a mother's life, an affection which is developed not alone from the temporal care which she devotes to the child, but also from the spiritual care, whereby she has been able to put her child's hand into the hand of a loving Christ.

The Heart Like a Gem.

Like the sensitive opal when it comes into contact with the living hand, the heart of the believer is made to glow when it feels the warm love and gratitude of those whom it has led into the spiritual newness of life. The story is told that a celebrated New York jeweler purchased in Europe a magnificent collection of gems. When he returned home, he arranged these stones in a cabinet and invited some of his closest friends to inspect them. When his friends entered the room, he pointed to the cabinet and said: "There, gentlemen, is the richest collection of gems, I believe, in all this land. There is nothing like it in value anywhere." The friends were in raptures over the sight. In the cabinet were pearls and amethysts and diamonds and rare stones of all sorts. It seemed as though the richest treasures of the noted peacock throne of India, which was worth over $60,000,000, had been selected for this collection. But in the midst of all these beautiful jewels was one which looked like an unsightly pebble. "Why do you place such a dull, hideous looking, pebblelike stone as that among those costly gems?" asked one of the visitors. The host answered not a word. He unlocked the cabinet, took out the pebblelike stone and held it in the palm of his closed hand. Just as the gems were about to leave, the host said: "I will show you the richest and rarest stone of all my treasures." He opened his hand, and there upon the palm was a stone which glowed like a live coal. It was such a brilliant stone that every guest uttered an exclamation of surprise. "Where did you get it?" they cried. "We have never seen the like of it before." "That stone is the rarest I have," answered the jeweler. "That is the unsightly pebble you saw a few moments ago in the cabinet. That is a sensitive opal, which has been warmed into what looks like a live coal by the heat of my blood."

The true Christian sower ought to be ready to sow the good seed under conditions, no matter whether he is praised or blamed, honored or despised, but when he does begin to gather harvests he will not only reap a sheaf of joy which comes from the realization that he has won some souls, but he will also reap the gratitude and the love of those who were brought to Christ through his instrumentalities. This love and gratitude will transform the jewel of his heart into a glowing gem, aflame with life, which shall glow like the richest jewel that ever flashed in the crown of a king.

The Sheaf of Contentment.

Another precious sheaf which is garnered by the Christian reaper is the sheaf of contentment, the willingness to live happily in that field of life which he has been placed by God. A man does not mingle with the poor and the troubled, the sick and the suffering, he never fully realizes his good and kind and loving God has been to him. If a man does not visit the sickroom and try to carry there comfort and good cheer to the wan invalid, he never fully appreciates the blessings of health unless perhaps he himself has been carried into a hospital. Then, while recovering from a serious sickness, he has seen intense sufferings and agonies such as may be witnessed in almost every ward of a large hospital. If a man has never entered a home where diphtheria has played havoc with the nursery or where consumption has made the young mother cough her life away, he never fully appreciates the blessings of having his children and wife by his side. If a man has not tried to carry the gospel to the outcasts and the vile, he has never yet realized the blessing of being born in a Christian cradle and surrounded by a Christian childhood. A true Christian sower who scatters the good seed upon the troubled sea of restless humanity, while he may be carrying a blessing to others he is also planting in his own heart the seeds of gratitude to God and of contentment with his own sphere of life.

My brother, you are unhappy. Why do you let me end your despondency? Well, then, go first and buy a few flowers at the nearest florist's. "Oh," you answer, "I cannot afford to buy any flowers." Yes, you can, my brother. You can buy all the flowers I want for the money you would spend upon cigars during the next week. Then I want you to go with me for a pastoral call into the young man's room who broke down physically and who is going to die. Do you know what is the matter with him? He broke down from overwork. His life's desire was to enter the Christian ministry. He used to clerk during the day and send money of his money home to help support his father's family. Then he used to study at night. His clothing was very poor, his food was poor, and yet if you will go into that sickroom and carry those flowers you will find tears of joy on

Some prominent business men and educators, including John Wannamaker and Edward Everett Hale, have petitioned the life insurance companies to make a difference in favor of the temperate policy holders. They claim that the proportion of deaths among drinking men is much greater than among total abstainers, and that the latter should not be forced to pay the price of the drinker's risk. The officers have replied that they will hereafter place in a separate class all applicants who are total abstainers. One Canadian, and several European companies already make this difference.—The Boy.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

the former at Cumberland Street, and the latter at Queen Street church, who have only served one year, will be returned to their respective charges.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian, who is now closing up his second year at Memorial church, Berkley, has conducted a most successful pastorate in the history of that church, and will carry up to Conference a splendid financial report—amount raised being more than that assessed against the church.

In Portsmouth there is not likely to be any change, as all of the pastors are giving satisfaction. At Monumental, Rev. C. H. Rawlings is doing a fine work in his third year. And it is known that Monumental always keeps a pastorate ten years. Rev. W. T. Green doing magnificently at Central church, which has just occupied its new and handsome edifice, and his removal at the end of his first year would be considered a blunder. Rev. George H. McFaden is serving out his first year at Wright Memorial. He has met with phenomenal successes, and his congregation are bound to him by hooks of steel. They will send up to Conference a unanimous request for his return.

The only actual change in the Portsmouth district is Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder. It is not known where he will be assigned, whether to the Rappahannock, Lynchburg or Norfolk and Eastern Shore district.

The regular preachers in the itinerary who are to be changed from the Portsmouth district are Rev. W. R. Crowder, Denby's church; Rev. M. S. Coleman, Sr., Benns; Rev. T. O. Edwards, Boykins.

Norfolk and Eastern Shore district—Rev. W. E. Judkins, presiding elder; Rev. W. G. Bates, Kellar circuit, and Rev. J. D. Hosier, Pocomoke.

Norfolk will have three additional preachers next year; one for the new Ghent church, one for Park Place, and a city missionary.—Virginian-Pilot.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

For the first time in seven years the Methodist preachers resumed holding their regular meetings at Cumberland Street church at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning, where this ecclesiastical body was originally organized some thirty years ago, though not in the same building, for at the time of its organization the Cumberland Street congregation was worshipping in the old mother church in Cumberland street, near Cove street.

Although the change in the location of the meeting was not very generally known, there was a full attendance of pastors.

Rev. W. R. Proctor, president of the body, called the meeting to order, and prayer was offered by Rev. John W. Crider, one of the oldest members.

The most important matter that claimed the attention of the meeting was the establishment of a Methodist City Mission in Norfolk under the patronage of the Virginia Annual Conference, the same to be provided for in part by the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, in Virginia. The subject was very fully discussed, and the necessity for the establishment of such a mission here, by Rev. R. H. Bennett, Rev. C. L. Bane, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, Rev. George Wesley Jones, Rev. W. Asbury Christian, Rev. D. J. Traynham and Rev. G. H. Lambeth.

The following resolutions, presented by Rev. Graham H. Lambeth, were unanimously adopted:

"We, the Methodist preachers of Norfolk, recommend—

"1st—That a mission charge be established in Norfolk similar to our Richmond mission.

"2d—That a suitable preacher be appointed by the Presiding Bishop at the coming Annual Conference.

"3d—That $500 be appropriated by our Mission Board for the furtherance of this work.

"4th—That our Norfolk churches each take an annual offering to supplement the above appropriation.

"G. H. LAMBETH.

"E. T. DADMUN.

"W. T. GREEN."

After the adoption of the above resolutions, on motion, Rev. R. H. Bennett and Rev. E. T. Dadmun were appointed a committee to go before the Conference mission board and urge it to make the appropriation asked for in order that the work may be started soon after the adjournment of Conference.

Mrs. Faville appeared before the meeting in the interest of the city mission now being conducted on Virginia street under the patronage of several of the Methodist churches. She made some interesting statements in reference to the work, and read the report of the missionary for the year, now drawing to a close, which showed that a large amount of missionary work had been done among the children in that section of the city. She asked for a continued endorsement of the work by the preachers' meeting. The request was taken under advisement.

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

The call of the churches was taken up, and reports heard from the following:

Rev. J. W. Crider worshipped at Cumberland Street church Sunday morning and night, and spent a most pleasant day.

Rev. J. B. Merritt had a good day at the Seamen's Bethel Sunday, and pleasant services.

Rev. W. P. Jordan conducted a very good Sunday school at Park Place on Sunday morning. In the evening he preached at Bethel for the pastor, Rev. N. R. Smith, who is sick; received two members on profession of faith and administered the ordinance of baptism.

Rev. C. W. Cain attended the dedicatory services at the new Central church in Portsmouth Sunday morning, and heard Bishop Granbery preach. Attended the Pythian services at Wright Memorial in the afternoon and heard Rev. George H. McFaden; at night he attended the First Presbyterian church and heard Rev. Mr. Wolfe.

Rev. E. K. Odell reported pleasant services at Huntersville church. Rev. Mr. Wray preached at 11 A. M. At night Mr. Odell preached to a very large congregation. The Sunday school missionary society in the past six months raised $27.68 for foreign missions.

The services at Cumberland Street church Sunday were of an interesting and profitable character. There was a fine Sunday school, and the penny collections for the month amounted to $24. Mr. Bane stated that this Sunday school had contributed more to the mission cause than any Sunday school in the Conference. Mr. Bane preached to fine congregations morning and night and had one of the largest communion services during his pastorate. He received five members on profession of faith and two by certificate.

Rev. W. R. Crowder had two fine congregations to hear him at Denbys church Sunday, and received three new scholars in the Sunday school.

Rev. Ernest Stevens held his usual services at Owens Memorial Sunday. His congregation at night was larger than usual.

Rev. J. N. Latham had a very large Sunday school at Park View; he received ten new scholars, and had most excellent congregations to hear him at both services.

Rev. George H. McFaden attended the Sunday school at Wright Memorial, preached at 11 A. M., and at 3:30 P. M. preached to the Pythians and occupied his pulpit again at night. He reported one profession.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun reported a great day at Centenary church Sunday, the largest congregation being present morning and night during his pastorate. Four were received into the church on profession of faith and two were converted. He will hold revival services Wednesday night.

Rev. George Wesley Jones reported a good day at Trinity Sunday, and large congregations.

At Epworth church there were two splendid congregations, the one at night being unusually large.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian had unusually large congregations at Memorial. He received one member on profession of faith, and raised the largest missionary and Conference collection ever known in the history of the church, the amount being about $700.

Rev. D. B. Austin had a full day Sunday. He preached at Haygood Memorial morning and night Sunday, and in the afternoon at Lynnhaven.

Rev. D. J. Traynham preached at Beach Grove morning, and at Joliff in the afternoon, to large congregations. Both churches will pay their Conference collections in full.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth reported $30.37 raised for foreign missions in the Sunday school at LeKies Memorial. He preached morning and night, and had a most delightful communion service.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had good congregations at Port Norfolk. He received two on profession of faith, and three by certificate, and raised $50 for missions in the Sunday school.

Rev. W. R. Proctor preached to fine congregations at McKendree and had a very large communion at the morning service.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings held his morning and evening services at Monumental church, and received five new members on profession of faith. In the afternoon he spoke at the Y. M. C. A.—Virginian-Pilot.

CENTRAL CHURCH DEDICATED.

The new Central Methodist Episcopal church, South, which was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God yesterday by Bishop J. C. Granbery, in the presence of a congregation which filled the handsome stone structure to the doors, adds another to the magnificent houses of worship for which this city is fast becoming noted.

At the conclusion of the sermon by the Bishop, subscriptions toward the liquidation of the debt on the church building were made by the congregation, after the pastor had stated the need thereof, declaring that the church in order to have been built at all had to be built partly on cash and largely on faith. The congregation was prepared for the appeal, however, and the snug sum of $3,200 was realized. This together with the other subscriptions now in hand, will reduce the debt on the church from $18,000 to $12,000.

The church is one of the handsomest to be found in this section, where there are many handsome and costly churches. The exterior is built of Mount Airy granite, trimmed with buff sandstone, which is artistically carved around the doors and windows. On the Washington street front appears the name carved in large letters: "Central M. E. Church."

The church has a frontage of eighty feet on Washington street, and eighty-eight and a half feet on South street. The pitch of the roof is fifty feet, and is dome shaped. From the southeastern corner a massive but graceful tower springs to a height of ninety-eight feet from the sidewalk. There are four entrances; five counting that through the Sunday school room. The main entrances are through two vestibules, one at the tower corner and the other on Washington street.

Three great rose windows, each twenty feet in diameter, and a twenty foot skylight in the dome, together with fifteen other large windows, afford a splendid light.

The three large circular windows are works of art, and were furnished, as was all the other windows, by the Von Gerichten Art Glass Company, of Columbus, O. They are memorial windows. That on the north side of the building, facing the main entrance, was given by the congregation to the memory of Rev. R. F. Beadles, who began the erection of the church, and whose sad death occurred while the foundation was being laid. It is a very handsome figure window, and represents the ascension of Christ. The window on the south side of the building is also a figure window, and was given by Mrs. Menger, of Baltimore, in memory of her father and mother, the late John L. Thomas, and his wife, Mrs. Thomas, who were among the founders of Wesley Chapel, and faithful, honored and beloved members of Central church. The window facing the east is in memory of the late William Ives, who was for a long time the beloved treasurer of Central church, and who had been a consistent member for many years. It represents the Good Shepherd, and is placed in the church in memory of their father by his children.

Bishop Granbery's sermon was one of the ablest deliverances ever made from a Portsmouth pulpit. He took his text from the Gospel according to St. Matthew, 13th chapter and 31st to 33d verses: "Another parable put He forth to them, saying, the kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field.

"Which, indeed, is the least of all seeds; but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

"Another parable spake He unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened."

The Bishop said in substance:

I rejoice with you, brethren and friends, and thank God that you have triumphantly erected here a temple to God and for His worship. How closely connected the house and the society of the believers, both being known by the same name, the Church.

God grant that His Spirit may fill His temple and the hearts of His people.

The house is for the worship of God, but we may extend that term to include all the means and activities for the advancement and progress of the kingdom of heaven. Extension of that kingdom means large territory and citizenship. Intensive progress is the elevation of the spiritual life of God's people. We hear much now-a-days of intensive farming, which means better results from the same soil. No American expansionist desires the whole earth for our union, but God says that He will give to His faithful subjects the uttermost parts of the earth for an heritage. He sent His apostles forth to preach the Gospel to all the earth.

It's not enough, brethren, that in that house of which Christ speaks in His parable we should blazon on a sign board, "Whosoever will is welcome and may enter," but it is needful that we, as His servants, should go forth into the highways and gather in God's children that His house may be filled. We who profess him must do this work. Truly our Lord does not desire unwilling guests, but He wishes that we should so far as possible bring in all those without the kingdom. And this is the object of the whole Church, of this Central church, the purpose for which this house was built, and to which purpose it is dedicated.

If the Gospel were preached in all lands and ages, and to every creature, Christ's object would not then be accomplished, not until men are not only brought to the knowledge of salvation, but also that they accept it and do their own share toward advancing the kingdom. "Man is to abide in Christ, and Christ in him." The purifying process must be going on every hour and every day, and so, and only so, shall your works be fruitful.

We believe that a measure of the Spirit is sent to every man, but our creed must be a living, practical, compelling power, an example of our ability under God to make men realize the spiritual perfection intended by God.

The speaker gave a beautiful illustration of the growth of religion by the simile of the planting of the mustard seed. Thus with a man's religion, he said, if it is not planted in good works it cannot be fruitful. The word and the spirit of the living God, he said, being planted in the human heart will transform every affection, motive, desire, thought, speech and all the conduct of that human being to make one a living monument to the grace of God.

"In the spread of the kingdom," said the Bishop, "the work of God is needed and the work of man is also necessary. But how different in their dignity, and scope are these works. God is the great fountain of grace; men are but the channels for dispensing that grace to a sinful world. But to the Great Fountain Head is all the honor—glory to His name."

The Bishop drew many beautiful illustrations of the Christian—the practical Christian at work. His helpfulness to his fellows, and his general usefulness in any community, his example to all men were touched upon by the eloquent speaker in chaste and beautiful language.

Referring to the wonderful growth of the Christian religion as an evidence of God's power to bring the world to Him, he alluded feelingly to the development of Methodism right here in Portsmouth and Norfolk, where in 1802 all the Methodists did not number as many as the congregation of Central church.

The outward and numerical growth is visible; the inward growth of the Christian, he said, is only known above. How many Christians there are who cannot be enumerated; they are known to God; the Good Shepherd knows His own. Yet, while it is impossible to look into the human heart and see what is there written by God, there are signs, outward evidence of Christianity in man. We know what sort of a tree it is by the fruit that it bears. And when the heart is not right, we may see it just as Peter saw it in the man who offered money to purchase the gift of God. There are such people in Portsmouth, and your work is to help them.

One result which would follow an application of the tests of Christianity would be a shrinkage of Church membership, the Bishop thought. There are hypocrites in the Church, but he believes there are few of them, and there are those who are taking unsteady and uncertain steps toward righteousness, and they need help, and there are men who have a daily fight with the world, the flesh and the devil. Sometimes we fear they are falling, but they do not give up, and may God help them. There are, too, those whose Christian lives bear testimony to the power of God. They increase in knowledge and religion as the pupil becomes the teacher, the apprentice the accomplished workman, the novice the expert; so the religious novice becomes a pillar in his master's house. He learns to bridle his passions, his tongue, cultivate his heart, and by sanctification come to be in harmony with our Lord. You do not have to watch that man, to urge him or to rebuke him. He is so rooted and grounded in love of God and man that he freely offers himself.

There is a Christian in whose character, justice and mercy, firmness and gentleness, zeal with patience, and courage with caution are blended in a harmonious whole—the perfect Christian. He is the cause—creation which finds ample reward in mere service, for its own sake, who finds joy in just doing good. When you gaze on such a man, you honor and trust him; instinctively you know him as a son of God.

And are there not here among you those whom you have watched for years whose lives have shone with this lustre and helped you? Such is the mission of the Church of God, and the mission which I trust it is performing here.

And oh, may the power of God be exerted here to that end; may the revival fire here never die, and may this house be indeed a means for the spread of the kingdom.—Portsmouth Star.

LAST QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

Fourth Quarterly meeting for this (White Stone) Circuit was held Monday in the Methodist church at Irvington. Presiding Elder Amiss preached here Sunday night and Monday morning, and Monday afternoon the business meeting was held. It was one of the most pleasant within normal recollections. Reports showed the work in the happiest of conditions. All assessments were up in full for the Conference year, and several overran. Marked spiritual and numerical advancement was evidence and Elder Amiss and Pastor C. R. James leave—their four years itinerancy expiring next month—with deep regret from the people and the satisfaction of having been largely instrumental in building up the circuit.

The following resolutions were unanimously passed by the Conference. They were responded to feelingly by elder and pastor, and not a few tears were indulged in by the laity. The resolutions read:

Whereas after the manner of the itinerant system of the Southern Methodist Church, the time has come when Rappahannock District must pass under the supervision of another than Bro. J. H. Amiss, and White Stone Circuit is to give up its pastor of four years; be it resolved by this Fourth Quarterly Conference of White Stone Circuit:

"1. In saying good-bye to Bro. Amiss there goes with him the unbounded and united love and esteem of the members of this circuit, and the sincere wish that his future field may be pleasant, and his work prosperous. We recognize his ability as well as his consecration in the work of the Lord, and united with these precious gifts his Master has shown approval of his eldership in the hitherto unequalled success of the work on this district—it has grown in numbers, and we have the best of reasons to believe that its spirituality has been quickened. The love and harmony that have marked all his movements throughout our circuit have cemented us stronger in fellowship and Christian love.

"2. The hearts of this people are depressed in having so soon to part with our pastor and his family. Under the same inexorable but beneficent law that takes from us our elder, Rev. C. R. James must go to another field. His pure Christian character and life, and that of members of his family, give assurance that his reception will be cordial and his sojourn wherever sent be replete with Christian encouragement and satisfaction of duty well done. His work here, as far as human judgment can figure, has resulted in marked success, and from results we feel sure that it has received divine approval.

"2. To each of these departing brethren and their families we wish to tender our love and cordial wishes for future welfare, and hereby register our sincere expression of gratitude in that their paths have been directed this way by an all-wise providence."—Virginia Citizen.

The Liquor Dealers' Association met in Raleigh last week. It was quietly given out that the Association would support, and its members would support, only the men who are friendly to their business. And it has become the fashion, in some quarters, for the politicians just to assent to that sort of tyranny and let the saloon hold the balance of power. Now, the remedy is in the people's own hands. They do not want the saloon, and often the politicians, to do them justice, do not want it either. The people ought to let the politicians feel that any alliance with the saloon will defeat them, instead of electing them. Let the people highly resolve never to cast their votes for any man who has betrayed their interests for the interests of the saloon, and the politicians will soon discover on which side their bread is buttered. A relentless determination to this end will be the greatest kindness to all concerned. And when the friendship of the saloon worketh defeat, the people can execute their will.

ing into his grateful eyes; you will hear him say that, though the greatest ambition of his life was to preach the gospel, yet God knows best! Then he will plead with you to take his place. My brother, you had a father to send you through college; you had kind friends to help; you have everything for which to be thankful to God, yet the greatest lesson of contentment you will ever learn is when you cast those few flowers into the grateful fountain of that dying boy's tears.

My sister, you are fretting on account of the children. You say it keeps your needle going night and day to put dresses upon the girls. You complain that the boys never seem to care whether or no they wear holes in the knees of their stockings and pants. Sister, I want you to make up a lunch basket. You need not fix up a bundle of little dresses. They will not be needed now. But as you take that lunch basket, filled with delicacies, I will lead you to a home where a young mother has just lost her baby. That baby was an idiot. He had water upon the brain. Yet, as you go into the sickroom of the weak mother, you will hear her say: "Oh, Mr. Talmage, I did love him so much! The doctors said he never would be bright. But he was all I had. I did love my baby so much!" And after you have gone there with me you will stop your complaining and faultfinding and return to your home and love your little ones as you have never loved them before. Yes, one of the most precious sheaves the gospel reaper ever gathers is the sheaf of contentment, the sheaf of gratitude to God for his many, many blessings.

Plant Undying Seeds.

Another precious sheaf which is garnered by the Christian sower is the joyful realization that the results of his seed planting will never die as long as the world lasts. As we have before said, one seed properly planted will produce many seeds. Those seeds which are produced by the one seed in turn will produce many other seeds. And these in their turn will produce many seeds more. So a Christian's earthly influence does not cease at the grave, but will multiply for good as long as the world lasts. It will go on increasing until the seas have been licked up and the mountains and the valleys have been cremated in the last conflagration.

Dr. Louis A. Banks tells how Rev. Dr. Valpy wrote four simple lines for his confession of faith. They went thus:

In peace let me resign my breath
And thy salvation see;
My sins deserve eternal death,
But Jesus died for me.

Dr. Valpy gave a copy of those lines to Dr. Marsh, the rector of Beckenham, who had them placed over his study desk. The Earl of Roden was visiting Dr. Marsh one day and asked him for a copy. A short time after this General Taylor, a hero of Waterloo, was visiting the Earl of Roden and he took a copy of those lines and was by them led to Christ. General Taylor in turn gave a copy of those lines to a soldier friend of his, and he also was converted. Thus the good seed which Dr. Valpy sowed many years ago has kept on through generation after generation, multiplying for good a hundredfold. And today perhaps by my repeating those lines some one here may be converted by them.

My father once told of a chain of influence more wonderful to hear even than the story of Dr. Valpy as showing the results of gospel seed planting. He started with a poor woman giving a simple gospel tract to a passerby. That tract brought this ~~young~~ man to Christ. This young man wrote a book. That book was blessed of the Holy Spirit and brought thousands upon thousands into the kingdom, among others Richard Baxter, who wrote "Saints' Rest." That book in turn brought thousands upon thousands into the kingdom of God. Among other converts were this man, that man and the other man who in turn all wrote books which had blessed results. So there was developed a harvest of thousands of souls, all the direct results of one simple seed planting, the result of one poor unknown woman giving a gospel tract to a young man who was passing by. So the results of the good seed which the gospel sower sows will never die as long as this old world lasts.

The Eternal Harvest Home.

But the most precious sheaf garnered by the Christian sower and reaper is the joyful realization that all the harvests which result from all the different Christian plantings shall be gathered at last into the granaries of heaven. It matters not how many immortal men and women and children may be saved, nor whether they are rich or poor, black or white, Jew or gentile, Protestant or Catholic, they shall all find room for themselves in heaven. All who will accept Christ and throw themselves upon his pardon and love can come. The sower of the gospel seed might hesitate to cast the bread of life upon the troubled sea of sin if he thought the gospel invitation was to be in any way circumscribed. But it is not. The invitation is so wide that it takes in all who are ready to be cleansed of sin. The invitation is so wide that the welcome comes from every direction. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely." That surely is a broad enough invitation for all.

And what a harvest home that will be when all the gospel sheaves shall be gathered into the granaries of heaven! The rejoicing will be everywhere. Some of us have seen the noted picture of the painter Seifert, called "The Harvesters' Return." We have seen there the joyful looks upon the faces of the men and the women who have been working in the fields. Perhaps we ourselves have lived in the country. We have shared in the joy of the laborers when the last sheaf of wheat has been taken to the thrashing floors, but the joy of the earthly harvest home is as nothing compared to the heavenly joy when all the gospel sheaves shall be gathered into the heavenly granaries. Fathers and mothers and children, they will all be there. Brothers and sisters, they shall be there. Husbands and wives, friends and loved ones, they shall be there. From the north, the east, the south and the west of the heavenly lands will be heard the cry: "Harvest home, harvest home, harvest home! This is the eternal harvest home!"

Sad to his toil he goes,
His seed with weeping leaves,
But he shall come at twilight's close
And bring his golden sheaves.

Now, as the gospel sower who casts his bread upon the waters shall reap such glorious harvests, shall we not redouble our energies and plant as many good seeds as we can for Christ? Shall we not do as much good as we can in the few years that remain for us? Shall we not thank God that he has given to us an opportunity to work and to live for him? Shall we not find our joy and reward in sowing and in scattering our gospel seed over the field of sin, in scattering our good deeds over the great troubled sea of humanity?

THE CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Annual Conference met at the Broad Street church, Richmond, Wednesday morning, November 12th. We will give full report of proceedings in our next issue.

FOUR BISHOPS IN VIRGINIA.

Last Sunday found four of our Bishops in Virginia. Bishop Granbery dedicated the church at Sanford, Accomack county; Bishop Duncan the church at York county; Bishop Candler, the Greene Memorial, at Roanoke, and Bishop Smith the church at Franklin. The Recorder wishes it could get all their sermons for publication.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

Yesterday (November 7th) the Rev. M. Hickey, of Holston Conference, was laid away to rest in Morristown cemetery. He died Wednesday, the 5th, aged about 82 years. He had been growing weaker for some time. Overestimating his strength, he had overexerted himself on his little farm. Besides, he attended a meeting some ten miles distant the Sunday before, and returned the same day, making the journey by buggy and without his overcoat. A severe cold produced congestion of the lungs and he went down rapidly. He was born in 1820, and received into Conference 1845. He was mentioned in all our principal towns, and was ten years a presiding elder.

He was a born orator, and was a very effective preacher. If he had been ambitious, and given himself to books, he could have filled acceptably any pulpit in the nation. But he preferred to devote himself to the details of soul-saving.

The Rev. L. M. Cartwright, our presiding elder, is confined to his bed with affliction, but not dangerous.

Strange to say, I have not heard what they did with Jackson at the Tennessee Conference. I hope his case was passed in silence.

I have been very busy revising the manuscript for Volume I. of Methodism in Holston, and hope to find a printer in a few days.

Such apathy in elections as was witnessed the 4th instant in this State has seldom been witnessed. Indeed, this apathy seems to have prevailed somewhat throughout the nation. It is not the best sign to see the people indifferent on the subject of politics, and especially as to who shall vote. No money was spent in Morristown; hence the polls were not thronged. A dollar a head—really a high price for the men who are for sale—will bring multitudes to the voting places.

Our new church in Morristown is approaching completion, and I think it will be the most handsome church in the Conference. It is a daisy—if you will allow a vulgarism. The pastor, the Rev. J. A. Baylor, has given much of his time to the enterprise. Baylor is a rising young man. In my opinion, no man in Holston Conference can preach better sermons, take one Sunday with another, than he. He is calm in delivery, but has a strange magnetism that holds his audience with rivets of steel.

I preach occasionally, free of charge, in the suburbs—a place nicknamed Rheatown. I am trying to restore the obsolete miracle of preaching the Gospel to the poor. It seems to me that our city churches are little more than social clubs—aristocratic clubs, at that. The poor are habitually neglected at their homes, and they can't dress sufficiently to darken our doors.

The Holston Conference Annual is out. It is edited by the Rev. James A. Barrow, and it is the best publication of its kind in America, I believe. Barrow got it printed in Knoxville in preference to Nashville, because he could get it as well done in Knoxville, and at cheaper rates than at Nashville. How does that happen? Why should not our Publishing House do work as cheaply as it can be done anywhere? I am still convinced that we ought not to have a printing house—but purely a publishing house; for our agents could get the mechanical work done more cheaply than they can do it themselves. But this is singing songs to a dead horse. I am spitting against the wind. A reformer, who does not succeed in reforming, only butts his brains out.

I am glad to see that the Rev. Geo. R. Stuart is creating such a stir in your parts. He was partly brought up within sixty feet of my house, in Morristown, and went to school with my boys. I taught him the calculus at Emory and Henry. I like George personally; he is the prince of clever fellows; and I wish him great success in saving men from death and future correction. Bro. Stuart is son-in-law to Dr. David Sullins. Sullins has been the pastor of Holston Methodism for a half century. He is a man of great intellect and an impassioned orator. He is eminently a lover of his race. Long may he live to cheer and lead his brethren!

The Rev. Dr. George D. French, agent of the American Bible Society for three States, is one of my near neighbors. He is brother-in-law to Bishop Hoss, and is making a very thoughtful, careful, successful agent. He has fine social qualities, and has an excellent family. Mrs. French is a great granddaughter of John Sevier, the first Governor of Tennessee. John Sevier's popular qualities seem to have been handed down to his posterity.

Morristown, Tenn., Nov. 8, 1902.

LETTER FROM REV. W. P. TURNER, OF JAPAN.

Dear Christian Friends,—My personal field of labor includes all the western end of the island of Shikoku, one of the four large islands that comprise the empire of Japan. In this section there are seven large towns of from five to fifteen thousand inhabitants, with scores of villages. We have regular work carried on in but three of the most important of these places, including Uwajima, where we live; but we make visits to other places as time and funds allow us, and always have interesting meetings. I have taken my magic lantern and gone out to the fishing villages on the coast, and had open-air magic lantern meetings on the sea beach. Almost the whole village will turn out and listen for an hour or more to the story of the Prodigal Son as the series of pictures are thrown on the curtain, and sometimes a mother will shed tears as she listens to the beautiful but pathetic story. We have set a whole village talking for a week after one of these meetings. If we had more helpers and more money to pay expenses, we could do much of this kind of work. For fifty miles up and down the coast, here and there, are tens of thousands of people who have never heard a talk about our God or Christ, but would be glad to do so. I wish I could hire a large row-boat, something like the house boats in China, and take several helpers and ten thousand simple tracts and go to all these places in the bounds of my work and hold meetings. The people would give us the most respectful hearing. But this is a vain wish under present conditions, for during the past Conference year I have had to borrow twenty-five dollars to keep my regular work going.

Where we live here in Uwajima, we have a very encouraging work. At the recent Annual Conference we reported two hundred and seventy-five Sunday school children, and would have reported more if we had followed strictly the law for reporting made at the last General Conference. We have more than we can properly teach or accommodate in our little church house. We have an excellent Young People's Society, or Epworth League, with thirty-nine members, which is active and helpful in all our Church work. We have a Bible woman, supported by a superannuated preacher and his wife in Virginia, and she is doing an excellent work among the women. I have English and Bible classes among students and teachers, and Mrs. Turner has about thirty girls in similar classes.

I have had some controversies during the past year in the daily newspaper here on questions of Christianity and local moral conditions that I am sure did good. One leading Buddhist priest quit his temple and is studying Christianity, and a company that had organized to buy and sell immoral women went out of business as a result of the agitation we raised. One of our leading members, who owns a match factory and had never seen his way to give Sunday rest to his forty employees, now closes every Sunday and devotes his rest days to Christian work.

So we are growing within the Church and without, our influence is spreading, and opportunities are being opened everywhere. We need more help in men, in money, and in prayers, but will continue to do what we can ourselves.

Cordially yours,

W. P. TURNER.

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

"On, don't you worry!" went on Abe cheerfully. "I'll look after that part. And anyway ain't they the blindest blankety blank" going off again into a roll of curses till Craig, in an agony of entreaty, succeeded in arresting the flow of profanity possible to no one but a mountain stage driver. Abe paused, looking hurt, and asked if they did not deserve everything he was calling down upon them.

"Yes, yes," urged Craig, "but that is not our business."

"Well so I reckoned," replied Abe, recognizing the limitations of the cloth. "You ain't used to it, and you can't be expected to do it, but it just makes me feel good—let out of school like—to properly do 'em up, the blank, blank"—And off he went again. It was only under the pressure of Mr. Craig's prayers and commands that he finally agreed to "hold in, though it's tough."

"What's to be done?" asked Shaw.

"Nothing," answered Craig bitterly.

He was exhausted with his long ride from the Landing and broken with bitter disappointment over the ruin of all that he had labored so long to accomplish.

"Nonsense!" said Graeme. "There's a good deal to do."

It was agreed that Craig should remain with Nixon, while the others of us should gather up what fragments we could find of the broken league. We had just opened the door when we met a man striding up at a great pace. It was Geordie Crawford.

"Hae ye seen the lad?" was his salutation.

No one replied, so I told Geordie of my last sight of Billy in the orchestra.

"An' did ye no' gang aifter him?" he asked in indignant surprise, adding, with some contempt, "Mon, but ye're a feckless buddie!"

"Billy gone, too?" said Shaw. "They might have let Billy alone."

Poor Craig stood in dumb agony. Billy's fall seemed more than he could bear. We went out, leaving him heartbroken amid the ruins of his league.

CHAPTER IX.

THE LEAGUE'S REVENGE.

AS we stood outside of Craig's shack in the dim starlight we could not hide from ourselves that we were beaten. It was not so much grief as a blind fury that filled my heart, and, looking at the faces of the men about me, I read the same feeling there. But what could we do? The yells of carousing miners down at Slavin's told us that nothing could be done with them that night. To be so utterly beaten and unfairly and with no chance of revenge was maddening.

"I'd like to get back at 'em," said Abe, carefully repressing himself.

"I've got it, men," said Graeme suddenly. "This town does not require all the whisky there is in it." And he unfolded his plan. It was to gain possession of Slavin's saloon and the bar of the Black Rock hotel and clear out all the liquor to be found in both these places. I did not much like the idea, but Geordie said: "I'm ga'en aifter the lad. I'll hae naethin' tae dae wi' yon. It's no that easy, an' it's a sinfu' waste."

But Abe was wild to try it, and Shaw was quite willing, while old Nelson sternly approved.

"Nelson, you and Shaw get a couple of our men and attend to the saloon. Slavin and the whole gang are up at the Black Rock, so you won't have much trouble, but come to us as soon as you can."

And so we went our ways.

Then followed a scene the like of which I can never hope to see again, and it was worth a man's seeing, but there were times that night when I wished I had not agreed to follow Graeme in his plot.

As we went up to the hotel I asked Graeme:

"What about the law of this?"

"Law!" he replied indignantly. "They haven't troubled much about law in the whisky business here. They get a keg of high wines and some drugs and begin operations. No," he went on; "if we can get the crowd out and ourselves in we'll make them break the law in getting us out. The law won't trouble us over smuggled whisky. It will be a great lark, and they won't crow too loud over the league."

I did not like the undertaking at first, but as I thought of the whole wretched illegal business flourishing upon the weakness of the men in the mines and camps, whom I had learned to regard as brothers, and especially as I thought of the cowards that did for Nixon, I let my scruples go and determined, with Abe, to "get back at 'em."

We had no difficulty getting them out. Abe began to yell. Some men rushed out to learn the cause. He seized the foremost man, making a hideous uproar all the while, and in three minutes had every man out of the hotel and a lively row going on.

In two minutes more Graeme and I had the door of the ballroom locked and barricaded with empty casks. We then closed the door of the barroom leading to the outside. The barroom was a strongly built log shack, with a heavy door secured, after the manner of the early cabins, with two strong oak bars, so that we felt safe from attack from that quarter.

The ballroom we could not hold long, for the door was slight and entrance was possible through the window. But as only a few casks of liquor were left there our main work would be in the bar, so that the fight would be to hold the passageway. This we barricaded with casks and tables. But by this time the crowd had begun to realize what had happened and were wildly yelling at door and windows. With an ax which Graeme had brought with him the casks were soon stove in and left to empty themselves.

As I was about to empty the last cask Graeme stopped me, saying: "Let that stand here. It will help us." And so it did. "Now skip for the barricade!" yelled Graeme as a man came crashing through the window. But before he could regain his feet Graeme had seized him and flung him out upon the heads of the crowd outside. But through the other windows men were coming in, and Graeme rushed for the barricade, followed by two of the enemy, the foremost of whom I received at the top and hurled back upon the others.

"Now be quick!" said Graeme. "I'll hold this. Don't break any bottles on the floor. Throw them out there," pointing to a little window high up in the wall.

I made all haste. The casks did not take much time, and soon the whisky and beer were flowing over the floor. It made me think of Geordie's regret over the "sinfu' waste." The bottles took longer, and, glancing up now and then, I saw that Graeme was being hard pressed. Men would leap, two and three at a time, upon the barricade, and Graeme's arms would shoot out, and over they would topple upon the heads of those nearest. It was a great sight to see him standing alone, with a smile on his face and the light of battle in his eye, coolly meeting his assailants with those terrific, lightning-like blows. In fifteen minutes my work was done.

"What next?" I asked. "How do we get out?"

"How is the door?" he replied.

I looked through the porthole and said:

"A crowd of men waiting."

"We'll have to make a dash for it, I fancy," he replied cheerfully, though his face was covered with blood and his breath was coming in short gasps.

"Get down the bars and be ready."

But even as he spoke a chair hurled from below caught him on the arm, and before he could recover a man had cleared the barricade and was upon him like a tiger. It was Idaho Jack.

"Hold the barricade!" Graeme called out as they both went down.

I sprang to his place, but I had not much hope of holding it long. I had the heavy oak bar of the door in my hands, and, swinging it round my head, I made the crowd give back for a few moments.

Meantime Graeme had shaken off his enemy, who was circling about him upon his tiptoes, with a long knife in his hand, waiting for a chance to spring.

"I have been waiting for this for some time, Mr. Graeme," he said, smiling.

"Yes," replied Graeme, "ever since I spoiled your cutthroat game in Frisco. How is the little one?" he added sarcastically.

Idaho's face lost its smile and became distorted with fury as he replied, spitting out his words:

"She—is—where you will be before I am done with you."

"Ah, you murdered her too! You'll hang some beautiful day, Idaho," said Graeme as Idaho sprang upon him.

Graeme dodged his blow and caught his forearm with his left hand and held up high the murderous knife. Back and forward they swayed over the floor, slippery with whisky, the knife held high in the air. I wondered why Graeme did not strike, and then I saw his right hand hung limp from the wrist. The men were crowding upon the barricade. I was in despair. Graeme's strength was going fast. With a yell of exultant fury Idaho threw himself with all his weight upon Graeme, who could only cling to him. They swayed together toward me, but as they fell I brought down my bar upon the upraised hand and sent the knife flying across the room. Idaho's howl of rage and pain was mingled with a shout from below, and there, dashing the crowd to right and left, came old Nelson, followed by Abe, Sandy, Baptiste, Shaw and others. As they reached the barricade it crashed down and, carrying me with it, pinned me fast.

Looking out between the barrels, I saw what froze my heart with horror. In the fall Graeme had wound his arms about his enemy and held him in a grip so deadly that he could not strike, but Graeme's strength was failing, and when I looked I saw that Idaho was slowly dragging both across the slippery floor to where the knife lay. Nearer and nearer his outstretched fingers came to the knife. In vain I yelled and struggled. My voice was lost in the awful din, and the barricade held me fast. Above me, standing on a barrel head, was Baptiste, yelling like a demon. In vain I called to him. My fingers could just reach his foot, and he heeded not at all my touch. Slowly Idaho was dragging his almost unconscious victim toward the knife. His fingers were touching the blade point when, under a sudden inspiration, I pulled out my penknife, opened it with my teeth and drove the blade into Baptiste's foot. With a bloodcurdling yell he sprang down and began dancing round in his rage, peering among the barrels.

"Look! Look!" I was calling in agony and pointing. "For heaven's sake look, Baptiste!"

The fingers had closed upon the knife, the knife was already high in the air when, with a shriek, Baptiste cleared the room at a bound, and before the knife could fall the little Frenchman's boot had caught the uplifted wrist and sent the knife flying to the wall.

Then there was a great rushing sound as of wind through the forest, and the lights went out. When I awoke, I found myself lying with my head on Graeme's knees and Baptiste sprinkling snow on my face. As I looked up Graeme leaned over, and smiling down into my eyes, he said:

"Good boy! It was a great fight, and we put it up well." And then he whispered, "I owe you my life, my boy."

His words thrilled my heart through and through, for I loved him as only men can love men, but I only answered:

"I could not keep them back."

"It was well done," he said, and felt proud.

I confess I was thankful to be well out of it, for Graeme got off with a bone in his wrist broken and I with a couple of ribs cracked, but had it not been for the open barrel of whisky which kept them occupied for a time offering too good a chance to be lost and for the timely arrival of Nelson, neither of us had ever seen the light again.

We found Craig sound asleep upon his couch. His consternation on waking to see us torn, bruised and bloody was laughable, but he hastened to fix us warm water and bandages, and soon felt comfortable.

Baptiste was radiant with pride and delight over the fight and hovered about Graeme and me, giving vent to his feelings in admiring French and English expletives. But Abe was disgusted because of the failure at Slavin's, for when Nelson looked in he saw Slavin's French Canadian wife, charge, with her baby on her lap, as he came back to Shaw and said, "Come away; we can't touch this," and Shaw, after looking in, agreed that nothing could be done. A baby held the fort.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 53, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

HOW TO DO GOOD.

By Rev. Leonard Cox.

There are people so good they have nothing to do
But to growl that the world is no better;
For all but themselves, in their sanctified view,
Are bound by some soul-smirking fetter

There are people who drink, and people who dance,
And people who slander each other;
But how many there are do more ill, perchance,
These "uno guido" folk can't discover.

But of one thing be sure, when a fellow you find
Who has nothing to do but to grumble,
To his own little faults is completely bat-blind,
But is quick to observe when you stumble.

The chances are good, nine times out of ten,
That the skill in his vaunted profession,
Detective-like, comes from his knowledge of men
And the faults he has in possession.

Did'st e'er know a farmer to harvest but weeds
Who follows the plow of his neighbor?
Don't you find, as a rule, he most surely succeeds,
Who gives his own farm all his labor?

If you wish to do good, let each action declare
To yourself you are faithful in duty;
Let the path that you tread shed a brightness so fair
It will win by the force of its beauty.

If you wish to do good, beware all pretense;
Don't bragg of immaculate goodness;
Worse vices than those you may think an offence,
May prove all your virtue but rudeness.

Now, would you do good? You'll find plenty to do
In carefully scanning the ills of your own;
Your own needy heart has its claims upon you,
Your neighbor's, you'd best let alone.

How much better this world in all senses would be
Would each act on this excellent plan;
From pride, greed, and envy, each bosom made free,
While each does as well as he can.

A SURPRISE TO REV. J. T. ROUTTEN.

In token of the high esteem in which Rev. J. T. Routten is held in the hearts of the Chestnut Avenue Methodist church, the ladies of the Aid Society held a called meeting Thursday, 3 P. M., to donate to him a purse, whose intrinsic value least expressed the spirit of devotion to their pastor.

Prompted by the same spirit and expressive of their high regard for the man of God, a large concourse of the many friends of Mr. Routten began later to gather at the church with bundles and baskets and bags, as if some spontaneity of sentiment had wafted them in upon the evening zephyrs.

The "surprise" then began at the parsonage, as the crowd, which had now swelled to about 100, gentlemen and ladies, moved in on the mistress of the manse. The tables were spread and laden with fruits, candies, dainties and substantial, while the social features were such as can be found only in this land of Bible and sacred song and Christian hospitality.

No such an event could have flourished where the Lord Christ had not prepared the feast. Councilman A. E. Bfircher, with fitting remarks, presented the "token." Rev. Mr. Routten appropriately and with a pathos characteristic of his warm, genial nature, welcomed the "surprisers" and told how he appreciated their presence and how he would love to serve them next year. Rev. J. Monroe Campbell responded in a touching prayer suited to the occasion, and asked that the devoted people be not disappointed as to the return of their pastor.

The ladies of the society, and gentlemen friends, rendered superior music, while the rich sentiment of some was so stirred that they wept as "Blest be the tie that binds," etc., was sung.

Altogether, it is doubtful if a more hearty and loyal expression of appreciation was ever tendered a minister.

A LETTER FROM REV. C. G. HOUNSHELL, OF KOREA.

Dear Fellow Leaguers,—To you and the several thousands of our best young people who are engaged in the systematic study of the "primary work of the Church" my message flows from a heart that beats with sympathy and love.

The footprints of Jesus are beginning to gleam gloriously in Korea. One of our most hopeful signs is the rapidity with which the natives spread the Gospel message. In the whole central and southern part of Korea perhaps scarcely a village can be pointed out which has not been visited by native Christians, preaching and selling Gospels. It takes time for the Gospel seed to germinate in the stony heathen heart in order to produce the harvest which is as sure as the promises of God. As a result of native efforts to evangelize their own country, the missionary often hears the Macedonian cry from a distant village, and on going he finds a little group of natives studying the Bible, and desiring to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. The annual increase in some of the native churches is one hundred per cent. The rapidity with which the societies spring into existence is apostolic, and they thrust themselves upon us before we are prepared to take care of them. Korea needs absolutely all that you are able to give her. She is rotten to the core; nothing but a new creation can plant the Church of Jesus Christ upon this shore. Your time, your money, your thought, your prayers, your love, your life, all are demanded.

This spiritual blackness is beyond the power of the artist's brush; impenetrable by any ray, except the Gospel light. The temporal and spiritual conditions of this people are awful, surpassing your darkest dreams of heathen life. "My tears are my meat day and night." Long she has waited for you to bring the light, whose dawning maketh all things new.

What relief! what relief! Dr. C. F. Reid's letter brings news that Dr. Sawdon, of Toronto, Rev. W. G. Cram and wife, of Kentucky, and Rex. J. L. Gerdine, of Georgia, set sail in October for this field now ripe unto the harvest. I am sure your hearts come with them. It is a privilege which angels might covet. Inspiring is the thought that you there, and we here, are mingling our young life-blood with the young life of Korea, and are laying upon the altar of Him whose blood was not too precious for us, and who to-day is bending over us in love, ourselves, our friends, our tenderest love, for the speedy enlightenment of these who sit in darkness as dark as death.

Yours in the fellowship of the Gospel,
CHAS. G. HOUNSHELL, Songdo, Korea.

MRS. FERGUSON DEAD.

Mrs. Margaret Gaines Ferguson, wife of the Rev. Richard Ferguson, one of the most widely known ministers of the Virginia Conference, and herself as generally known and beloved for her gentleness and Christian graces, died at 6:45 o'clock yesterday afternoon at Saluda, Middlesex county, where her husband is located in the work of the ministry.

Mrs. Ferguson's death was not unexpected. On the contrary, the blow was mitigated by the knowledge that the end had long been seen to be inevitable, and by her preparedness for the summons. It is said by those who knew her best that she had long, patiently, and tearlessly awaited death as a relief from wasting illness. Mrs. Ferguson had been a sufferer from consumption for months. Her son, Richard, died last March, and since then her health had failed rapidly, this sorrow probably hastening the end.

With her in her last moments of life were her husband, her daughter, Mrs. R. T. Vaughan, of Amelia; her sister, Mrs. Frank Epes, of Prince George county; her half sister, Mrs. L. C. Blackwell, of Roanoke, and her children—Annie H. and Ernest P. Ferguson. Her son, Mr. R. T. Ferguson, of this city, and her son-in-law, Mr. R. T. Vaughan, left yesterday to go to her bedside, but did not reach her before her death. Two weeks ago her sons were called to her bedside, and remained with her some time, but she rallied somewhat, and they returned to their homes and work elsewhere. Besides her children named herein, two, Messrs. J. W., of this city, and R. T., of Randolph-Macon College, survive her.

Mrs. Ferguson was Miss Margaret Gaines Thrift, of Fluvanna county, prior to her marriage with Mr. Ferguson, then a young minister of the Virginia Methodist Conference. They were married about thirty years ago, she being then about 21 years old. Since that time she had resided in various counties or towns of the State, making her home wherever her husband's duties in the itinerant ministry called him. In all things she was his helpmeet and colaborer. Through this changing residence Mrs. Ferguson had become known to thousands throughout the State, who will read with sorrow of her death.

THE FUNERAL.

The remains of Mrs. Margaret G. Ferguson, wife of Rev. Richard Ferguson, arrived in this city yesterday morning at 10 o'clock via the Southern railway, and were taken to Petersburg at 12:20 P. M., accompanied by the family of the deceased, except her two daughters. The interment was in the Blandford Cemetery.

The pall-bearers were her four sons, Robert T., John W., C. Guy, and Ernest P. Ferguson; her son-in-law, R. T. Vaughan, of Amelia, and nephew, L. C. Blackwell, of Roanoke, Va.

The burial services were conducted by Rev. W. G. Starr, D. D., assisted by Rev. George E. Booker. Funeral services had been conducted at Saluda on Sunday by Rev. Mr. Richardson, of the Baptist church, and the services at the grave were simple. The floral offerings were many and very beautiful, prominent among them being a design furnished by the Ladies' Aid Society of each church on the Middlesex circuit, of which Rev. Richard Ferguson is pastor.

Mrs. M. E. Ferguson, widow of Dr. Richard Ferguson, came up from Hampton and went to Petersburg to attend the burial.—Dispatch.

METHODIST SOCIAL UNION.

Five hundred members of the Methodist Social Union of Chicago banqueted last night at the Auditorium with Bishop David H. Moore, of Asia, and Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell, of Africa, as guests of honor.

"The only solution of the Eastern question," said Bishop Moore when he began his address on the "Outlook in China," "is the Christianizing of China. Do not think that China's people are dead as to what the world is doing; do not think that because China's officials are corrupt the empire is corrupt. China only wants to be relieved of its superstition and darkness, when it will be a great nation."

Bishop Moore said that Japan, Korea and China were in a sense one. "If Russia ever once over-runs China," said he, "all the powers in the world cannot dislodge her and the doom of China is sealed."

Bishop Hartzell spoke on "Africa."—Evening News.

Bishop Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., today dedicated the new Greene Memorial Methodist Episcopal church, South. It is a handsome stone edifice, and is the most magnificently furnished church in Southwestern Virginia. The new church was recently acquired by exchange with St. Mark's Lutheran congregation, and over $30,000 has been expended in refitting it.—Baltimore Sun.

ROMANISM AND PROTESTANTISM.

BY R. H. BENNETT.

"By their fruits ye shall know them" will ever remain the God-given test for systems and men. Nothing is more evident to the unbiased student of history than the striking contrast in the results of these two faiths in the localities in which they have obtained. The comparative condition of the countries under the domination of the two systems may be stated in the words of one of our historians, who was certainly actuated by no prejudiced motive. His words are as true to-day as when he penned them. In speaking of the vain effort of the Church of Rome to perpetuate her sway over the intelligence of mankind, when society had long outgrown the condition which made this possible, Lord Macaulay says: "The loveliest and most fertile provinces of Europe have, under her rule, been sunk in poverty, in political servitude, and in intellectual torpor, while Protestant countries, once proverbial for sterility and barbarism, have been turned by skill and industry into gardens, and can boast of a long line of heroes and statesmen, philosophers and poets. Whoever knowing what Italy and Scotland naturally are, and what four hundred years ago they actually were, shall now compare the country around Rome with the country around Edinburgh, will be able to form some judgment as to the tendency of Papal domination. The descent of Spain, once the first among monarchies, to the lowest depths of degradation; the elevation of Holland, in spite of many natural disadvantages, to a position such as no commonwealth so small has ever reached, teach the same lesson. Whoever passes in Germany, from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant principality; in Switzerland, from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant canton; in Ireland, from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant county, finds that he has passed from a lower to a higher grade of civilization. On the other side of the Atlantic the same law prevails. The Protestants of the United States have left far behind them the Roman Catholics of Mexico, Peru and Brazil. The Roman Catholics of lower Canada remain inert, while the whole continent round them is in a ferment with Protestant activity and enterprise. The French have doubtless shown an energy and an intelligence which have justly entitled them to be called a great people. But this apparent exception will be found to conform to the rule, for in no country that is called Roman Catholic has the Roman Catholic Church, during several generations, possessed so little authority as in France."

In the contest between Elizabeth of England and Philip II. of Spain we see the two mightiest kingdoms of the world antagonized; Spain the proud mistress of the seas, the undisputed sovereign of the New World, only thwarted from her conquest of Britain by the agencies of nature, which sink and scatter the Armada. But in Spain Catholicism was supreme. The faintest signs of independence of thought were only needed, and be the offender prince or peasant, his fate was sure and terrible. In civil and religious liberty, in the arts and sciences, in letters and forensic eloquence, in palace and in cottage, everywhere, the trail of the serpent was visible. Is it any longer a matter of wonder that the intellect, as well as the power of the nation declined, Ticknor says of the books of this period: "From the abject title pages and dedications of the authors themselves, through the crowd of certificates collected from their friends, to establish the orthodoxy of works, that were as often as little connected with religion as fairy tales, down to the colophon supplicating pardon for any unconscious neglect of the authority of the Church, we are continually oppressed with painful proofs not only how completely the human mind was enslaved in Spain, but how grievously it had become cramped and crippled by the chains it had so long worn." The terrors of the Inquisition crushed out the last germ of personal liberty and intellectual freedom, and Spain sunk to the lowest depths of misery and crime.

The same degradation that took place in Spain could not happen in Italy, but, from the middle of the sixteenth century we find the intellectual energy of the nation rapidly waning. The tyranny of Rome forbade any advancement of thought in any department of learning. The love for the classics was gone. A class of philosophers indeed arose antagonistic to Aristotle, and ventured to speculate upon the construction of the universe. But Giordano Bruno was burned at the stake, and Galileo, with the horrors of the Inquisition before his face, was forced to abjure, upon his knees, as false, the Copernican doctrine, and sentenced to imprisonment during the Pope's pleasure. Italy and Spain both had their Protestants. But Italy and Spain mercilessly rooted out all vestige of them, and behold the conditions of these countries to-day.

France alone, of all the countries in which the Reformation failed, preserved in any measure her intellectual strength. The age of Louis XIV. has been called the Augustan age of French literature. The vigor of the French mind during this period was due in part to the intellectual pride of the nation being kindled by the splendor of the monarchy. The Renaissance survived in full force. Another element that entered in was the indirect influence of the reform movement, resulting in the Jansenist school, from which emanated the inimitable provincial letters of Blaise Pascal. France, with a keen insight, saw the truth in the principles of the Reformers. France just missed becoming Protestant, but France saw fit to crush the new spirit; St. Bartholomew and the Dragonade followed, and we see the fruitage of these butcheries in the horrible scenes of Robespierre's reign of terror when the gutters of Paris ran red with the blood of France's proudest chivalry.

HOW TO TREAT THE PREACHER.

(The following was prepared by W. C. Mansfield, of Atlanta, Ga., for a little booklet gotten up by Highland Avenue church. Mansfield so perfectly lives what he preaches that all he writes has the freshness of life itself.)

Receive him with open arms. Give him a whole-soul welcome without any salt in it. Don't be afraid to open up that naturally warm heart of yours to the man who has the biggest job in the world and gets less money out of it than a man holding any other position. He is a great big man, with a great big human heart, and his mission is to love folks. He also loves to be loved, and the more you love him the bigger he gets, and the more lovable he becomes. Do not freeze him with decorous civility. Better to say, "Scat" to him than that. When you have received him, introduce him to everybody you know. What I mean is, give him a regular "ovater." Tell the people you meet that you have the biggest preacher in town. I don't want you to misrepresent, but there will certainly be no intentional deception on your part if you will start out right by swallowing him whole without greasing. He then belongs to you, and don't you know your things are the best?

When you hear the new preacher is coming, have everything ready for him. Get the parsonage in fine shape. Clean up the house nicely and have the pantry full. Meet him and his family at the train and escort him to his home with flying banners. See that every gas jet or electric light in the parsonage is shining with a white light. Tell them at the electric light plant to add on the volts, for your preacher is coming. Well, you know what I mean: Come out of your shell, and let your warm heart beam in every lineament of your countenance, thrill at the very tips of your fingers, and vibrate with every intonation of your voice.

When you have seen to it that he is "received," keep on receiving him. He's your company. He can stay with you only four years at best, and in this sense is a sojourner.

When you go to church, you must go every service, prayer-meeting and all, look him right in the eye while he is preaching. Good listeners make good preaching, and good preaching is what you want. Do not stare at the ceiling or out of the window with a countenance like a coon. Remember you are folks. When the service is over, if you have done your part you will have received a message, and the first chance you get tell your preacher about it. If you do this, mark what I tell you, his next sermon will be better still. If you get half a chance holler "Amen." Do not sit there like a clothing dummy, but demonstrate by some token that your preacher is preaching. I remember once at a big meeting a preacher was delivering a fine message, and Bro. Jackson and the writer sprinkled the discourse with copious ejaculations of "Amen." When the preaching was over, he came to us and said: "Boys, if you had kept that up, you would have made me preach myself to death."

Whenever you see your preacher's clothes begin to look a little slick, go around and get up a subscription on the quiet and have him a new suit made. Don't make any fuss about this. You will have no trouble getting the money, for you have started out right, and kept the start up well. Everybody has a pride in him like you. He will be happy—not a suit of clothes' worth, but a loving congregation worth, and that's a whole heap.

When Thanksgiving day comes, see that your preacher has the biggest turkey on the market. When Christmas comes, see that Santa Claus goes earlier to the parsonage and stays longer than any place in the community. When you have your receptions, always have your preacher and your preacher's family. Don't neglect them in anything. They will adorn any good place, and add honor and real enjoyment to any commendable occasion. I believe I have had more real "fun," if you want to call it that, with preachers than anybody. There are mighty few of them gravey and long faced. They are bearers of "glad tidings of great joy," and the bright and joyous things of this life they recognize as gifts from our Father above, and they really take a keener delight in these than almost anybody can. So, associate with your preacher, and you'll get lots of good out of him, and impart much yourself.

Respect your preacher. Don't you ever patronizingly admit that he can preach well, but he doesn't know much about business. Say he knows more about in a minute than many of you well-to-do or rich people will ever know. If you had to live on his income, they would send you to the poor house in three months. No, that kind of stuff won't stand analysis. He can beat you preaching, and he can beat you at business, and you ought to be glad of it, for he's your undershepherd and the sheep ought to look up to the shepherd.

Well, I have just got started, but I must stop for lack of space. I have said nothing about your subscribing liberally and paying promptly. I have omitted enjoining upon you to sustain your preacher in all the church enterprises, etc., etc., etc. You don't need this, for having at the very outset received your preacher enthusiastically and having sustained the ovation from day to day, you have been walking with him hand in hand and have intuitively responded to any suggestions that have come from him looking to the upbuilding of the kingdom. Yours is a labor of love and they don't have to "bore" any service or money out of you.

Finally, God bless the preachers. There are great men and great. The soldier who flies to the rescue of his country in battle is great. The professional man who by patient toil and study reaches the topmost round of his line is great. The humble American citizen who, starting low in the social scale, aspires to and acquires the presidency of this great republic, is great. But greater than all is the minister of the Gospel, who has consecrated mind, body and soul to the service of the King of kings, and to his fellow-men build in the image of their God. Great, not because their fame is written on the page of an earthly and fading history, but whose fame shall echo down the long eternity that shall roll on and on forever.—Holston Christian Advocate.

Now we stand before a world with all its gates ajar.—R. E. Speer.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 23.

Text of the Lesson, Isa. xxviii, 1-13.
Memory Verse, 7—Golden Text, Isa. xxviii, 7—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]
 1. Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim, whose glorious beauty is a fading flower.

Samaria stood upon a beautiful swelling hill which commanded the whole country round—the hill terraced to the top, the surrounding country splendid and fruitful; symbol of excessive worldly luxuriance and pleasure. Not recognizing that God did all this for them and gave them all that they had, they became proud and self-sufficient. They were like the Babel builders, who said: "Let us build us a city. Let us make us a name lest we be scattered abroad" (Gen. xi, 4). They are also described in Rom. i, 21, "When they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened."

2-4. The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim, shall be trodden under feet, and the glorious beauty which is on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower.

One commentator says that as a first ripe fig, a dainty morsel, might be swallowed without chewing, so should Ephraim pass from sight, the fading flower of his glorious beauty be gone. The tempest of hail and the destroying storm are mentioned again in verses 17, 18, "The hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place, and your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand." Compare verse 15. The warning of chapter ii, 11, 17, stands and will stand till the kingdom comes. "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." Therefore "Cease ye from man" (22). Those whom God chooses for Himself must find their all in Him.

5, 6. In that day shall the Lord of Hosts be for a crown of glory and for a diadem of beauty unto the residue of His people.

What He will be to them they will also be to Him in that day, because of His beauty which will be upon them. He speaks of their righteousness and their glory which the nations shall see and says, "Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God" (Isa. lxii, 2, 3). This is spoken of the true people of God, the remnant of Israel who will truly trust in Jehovah. He Himself will be to them a true, divine, eternal glory in the eyes of all nations. It is written, "The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light and thy God thy glory" (Isa. lx, 19). "The glory in the midst" (Zech. ii, 5).

7, 8. But they also have erred through wine and through strong drink are out of the way. The priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink.

Those appointed to be watchmen, to deliver His people, are blind, ignorant, loving to slumber, talking in their sleep, looking to their own gain, saying, We will fill ourselves with strong drink, and tomorrow shall be as this day and much more abundant (Isa. lvi, 10-12). The priests were forbidden to drink wine or strong drink (Lev. x, 8, 9; Ezek. xlv, 21). All believers are priests, and our orders are, "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit" (I Pet. ii, 9; Eph. v, 18). In Song i, 2, it is written, "Thy love is better than wine."

and the vine has its roots in the earth, but the True Vine is He who came down from heaven.

9, 10. Whom shall he teach knowledge, and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? Them that are weaned from the milk and drawn from the breasts?

These wine loving, worldly wise, self-sufficient, God despising people sneer at the teaching of the prophet and ask if he thinks they are children just weaned from the breast? Does he think they will endure his useless repetitions and unceasing clatter? They do not want his preaching. They want to be let alone and to have the Holy One of Israel cease from before them (Isa. xxx, 11). The carnal mind is no better today, and the time has come when many will not endure sound doctrine (II Tim. iv, 3), and many teachers in theological seminaries consider those who believe the whole word of God to be unlearned and ignorant in their estimation. In a letter just to hand from South Africa the writer says that a minister remarked to him that the trouble was too much theology and too little Christianity.

11-13. This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest, and this is the refreshing, yet they would not hear.

As they stammer in their drunkenness so He will speak to them by those who in their estimation are stammerers. The word of God, to them a series of trivial commands, will be turned into a series of painful sufferings—a stone to break them, a net to snare them, a trap to take them (chapter viii, 14, 15). All the prophet can do is to keep at them with the Lord's offers if perchance some will turn to Him. In verses 5, 12, 16, we have glory and beauty, rest and refreshing and a sure foundation, but to all His offers they would not give heed (verse 12). Compare Isa. xxx, 15; Matt. xxii, 3; xxiii, 37; John x, 40, and note that the great hindrance on man's part is simply that he will not come to God, will not submit to God, will not accept His love. There is nothing between the greatest drunkard or sinner of any kind and full salvation in Christ but his own will, his stubborn unbelief. They love their evil ways, and their doings will not suffer them to turn unto their God (Hos. v, 4, margin), yet He loves and pleads and continues to say, "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out" (John vi, 37).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 23, "Thanksgiving and Thanks Living"—Text, Ps. cxvi, 12-17; Jas. i, 27.

The oldest forms of worship are connected with the recognition of some power superior to man in the giving of harvests. No people of any considerable degree of intelligence have been without harvest festivals. In these there have been elements of merely human gladness that there was abundant provision for bodily needs for some time to come. But mingled with the feasting and riotous rejoicing there have been rites of worship, rational or superstitious, in adoration of a beneficent Giver or in propitiation of one who could injure.

Our Thanksgiving season gives occasion for recognition of our blessings of the One who has given them and searching of His will as to what we shall do with His gifts.

It is well at this time for each one to go apart by himself and in quiet reckon up where he stands. If there has been prosperity of any kind and degree, look it fully in the face and recognize the change which has been made in your condition. Years back you knew the worth of cents; they came with such toilsome effort. Now you have dollars more easily coming. Some of it is due to your skill, diligence and frugality, but not all is to be credited to you. Much has been due to fortunate circumstances, to God's immediate blessing.

What then?

You owe it to yourself, to your God and your fellows to use your means, whether great or small, in the best possible way. You should be heart glad for God's favor and also you should be humbled by it. Who are you that God has so favored you? Are you big enough, strong enough, great hearted enough to carry the load and not be humbled by it?

Your real thanksgiving will be shown by the way you live.

You cannot end the matter by a good big subscription to church finances, to the missionary cause or education or to any other benevolence. God requires more. Your own soul and your fellow men need more. They need not your money half so much as they need you. Are you a better man this year than you were a year ago? You young people, how is it with each of you? You have gained something the past twelve months. Has it been worth getting? Is the possession such as to gladden you and enoble heart and life? Do you know God nearer and your associates dearer, yourself more devoted and determined for the right and true and less careful for the merely pleasant things of life?

Bless God for His benefits and live higher up in life because of them from this time onward.

The Neighbor.

Our first thought of the neighbor is of him who is near to us in space, in social position or in blood relationship, and our first impulse of neighborliness is toward these personally. Our first thought of doing good to the neighbor is to supply the natural wants and to guard from natural harm. But to have this thought of the neighbor alone may lead to doing evil and not good, since to love the person only is to love the evil as well as the good which makes up the person and to supply the wants of those naturally without deeper thought may be to give them means to do evil to others. Hence it is easily seen that we really love the neighbor and do good to him only as we love the good which is in him and foster and cherish that. Love to the evil disposed may properly be shown by denying them the gratification of their evil loves or by punishment for their evil doing.—Helper.

Personally Responsible.

The harvest may seem a long way off, but it will most assuredly come with its burning realities and tremendous consequences. There have always been seedtime and harvest, summer and winter, since the world began. So is it in human life. As summer follows spring and autumn follows summer and drary winter comes at last, even so will it be with all who neglected God's overtures of mercy in Christ. With them the harvest will soon be past and the summer ended, and their condition will be eternally hopeless. "He that observeth the wind shall not sow, and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap." Every man is personally responsible for his sowing and reaping.—Episcopal Recorder.

Home and Society.

Our home and our society are to us what the world is to a great man—the sphere we may fill with work that cannot die. The statesman molds a people into order and progress partly by the force of character, partly by great measures. We are the statesmen of our little world. Every day mother and father stamp their character upon their children's lives, mold their manners, conscience and future by the measures with which they direct the household.—S. A. Brooke.

Won by Prayer and Toil.

Perfect patience is a jewel which is won only by years of prayer and toil.—Lutheran Observer.

The Dawning Light.

Keep working on for what is right, And God will shed around His light, As daylight follows after night, Then all at last the dawn shall see And know the will of God shall be To make our souls sincere and free.

While only truth and love shall stay To usher in life's glorious day And teach mankind the heavenly way To find God's kingdom, bright and fair, Where souls are free from mortal care And find sweet peace beyond compare. —Philadelphia Ledger

MODERATE DRINKERS

THEY ARE RECRUITING SERGEANTS FOR ARMY OF DRUNKARDS.

The Fallacy of Their Arguments Exposed—Some Facts to Be Considered by Those Who Boast of Their "Capacity" For Liquor.

The New York American is continuing its regular publication of striking editorials on the drink question. In a recent issue it says:

These editorials on whisky drinking are not written especially for the man who by actual experience knows the results of excessive drinking. They are written in the hope that they may promote serious thinking among men whose habits are not yet formed, that they may awaken a keen sense of responsibility among those who have young men in their charge.

Today let us briefly discuss the case of the so called "moderate" whisky drinker. Of "moderate" drinkers at least half are struggling against the temptation to drink excessively. Of the moderate whisky drinkers, of those who pride themselves on their self-restraint, a great majority do drink to excess occasionally, and every time they make this mistake their moderation diminishes and their self control is weakened.

There is no sadder drinker than the miscalled "moderate" whisky drinker. He takes a drink, then takes another, then uses up his best energies and strength of will in the attempt to keep from taking a third. He was, technically, a "moderate" drinker last year, and considers himself a moderate drinker this year. But what he takes today he would have looked upon with horror a year or two years ago.

The "moderate" drinker, gradually drifting toward excess, suffers more keenly even than the confirmed drunkard. The drunkard takes his heavy dose of alcoholic poison. He wipes out utterly his self respect, his strength of will, every desire to be a decent man. While the alcohol lasts his moral sufferings are over. He suffers physically the next day, then drinks again, and so on until the end.

The "moderate" drinker struggles constantly with himself. If he is an intelligent man, he constantly mistrusts himself and fears his growing inclination. If he has the power of self-examination, he knows how much his success is hurt by his drinking; he knows how much harm it does to those who blindly rely on his statements of moderation. He knows what a lie the talk of moderation is.

The drinker who foolishly talks, at home and abroad, of his "moderate" drinking and its harmless character is among the most harmful of men. During his brief period of life he makes whisky respectable. He is the recruiting sergeant who adds to the army of drunkards.

Another dangerous and at the same time preposterous creature is the besotted fool who boasts of the amount that he can drink. In every barroom, in every club, you meet a poor, befuddled, weakened creature bragging about his "capacity." This same man sneers at the respectable human being who cannot drink much.

It is actually a fact that the drunkard who boasts of the quantity of alcohol that he can put into his system is often admired by other men. He never is compared, as he should be compared, to a hog with tuberculosis.

When you next hear a man boasting of what he can drink and filling the minds of young men with a hideous ambition to be brutes, give the hard drinker a few facts.

Tell him that the capacity to drink a great deal simply means a weakened, degenerate heart. It does not mean a strong head. Take a young man in normal health, with a strong heart and a good supply of blood. His system is at par. If you add a little alcohol, you overdrive his heart and flood the brain tissue with alcoholic blood, causing drunkenness. This drunkenness, easily caused, proves physical superiority, not inferiority.

An athlete in perfect condition is made drunk by an extremely small amount of alcohol. The wretched out-cast drunkard on the street would take five times as much to stop the shaking of his hands and get himself in condition to beg. That does not mean that the athlete is inferior to the gutter drunkard.

The child fifteen or sixteen years old in the last stages of consumption is sometimes kept alive by the use of alcohol. Such a child can absorb without intoxication three times as much as the strongest man.

These facts may convince the man who boasts of his capacity that his boast is simply a confession of weakness, of physical decay.

Nicotine an Enemy of Brains.

Dr. Herbert Fisk of the Northwestern university believes he has gathered statistics which prove that the use of tobacco is incompatible with the use of brains. He declares that among his students scholarship is in inverse relation to smoke and adds: "The students who get low marks of course say it is not due to tobacco. A somewhat careful observation of facts has convinced us that it is tobacco. Last year not one of the boys who used tobacco stood in the first rank of scholarship. This has been the usual rule."

Cure Consumption Without Alcohol.

Unusual interest has attached to the open air treatment of consumptives at the state sanitarium, Rutland, Mass. Neither alcohol in any form nor cod liver oil has been used. The percentage of cures is gratifying. Last year 399 patients were admitted, and there was but one death. In about half of the cases the disease was either apparently cured or arrested.

There is a movement on foot in Staunton to require the saloons to be closed at a reasonably early hour at night. It seems probable that the Council will enact an ordinance similar to the one that has been in force in Danville for a number of years, which requires all bar-rooms to be closed at 10 o'clock at night.

The Union Central LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

I don't believe there is any better insurance on the market than the UNION CENTRAL. I carry $10,000 with them.

HIGH STREET, PETERSBURG.

If, indeed, it be true that "all is well that ends well," I think I can safely say that we have had a very prosperous year at High Street.

We were favored with a very gracious revival in the spring, and the fires then enkindled have burned with some degree of illumination and intensity through the entire year. At ordinary services, from time to time, we have had conversions and reclamations.

Our finances are in excellent condition. There will be a surplus on the missionary collection. The Conference claims will be met in full, and all the other obligations will be paid.

We have raised $1,100 on our church debt this year, and will make it $1,200 by Christmas. We will greet the new year with a very small indebtedness, which we will seek to liquidate at once.

The High Street people are aggressive, earnest and consecrated. The lines have always fallen unto me in pleasant places, but it has never been my privilege to serve a kinder, more generous or more appreciative people. Surely they deserve to be classed among that number of whom the great architect of the universe has declared He "will make pillars in the temple of our God."

May their lives continue to be luminous and useful—the end of each one peaceful and triumphant, and their entrance into everlasting habitation abundant and glorious.

Religious News.

Rev. W. L. Jones preached his last sermon at the Methodist church at this place Sunday. We sincerely hope that he may be returned by his Conference to this circuit for another year. He has labored faithfully and acceptably, and has made a host of friends since he came here.—Appomattox Times.

The Rev. R. M. Chandler closed up the Conference year yesterday at Central Methodist church in Manchester by the most appropriate and impressive services.

Central church fully expects the return for another year of its pastor. He has endeared himself to all the members of the church and the community.—News.

Rev. R. N. Hartness will preach his farewell sermon at Drummondtown M. E. Church, South, on Sunday and leave for Conference next week. He will be sent back to his present charge, if his members have their way in the matter. They have shown their appreciation of him and desire for his return by paying him this year thirty-six dollars more than they promised him.—Enterprise.

The Rev. John W. Eure, well-known in this city, and a graduate of Randolph-Macon College, in Ashland, and also of Vanderbilt, in Nashville, Tenn., will identify himself with the Virginia Conference, which meets in Broad Street Methodist church next Wednesday.

Mr. Eure is well versed in music as well as in books, and this will be a stimulant to him in the pastorate.—Evening News.

The Rev. John E. McCartney, formerly of this city, but now a successful pastor of the West Point Methodist church, will, at the coming Conference next week, be transferred to Brazil by Bishop Duncan, if the young pastor's prospective plans permit of this move.

It is stated on good authority that Mr. McCartney has been approached by a representative of the Educational Board of the Church to take up the educational work in that country, and will accede to their wishes.

Mr. McCartney is a graduate of Randolph-Macon College and Vanderbilt University, in Tennessee, and is well equipped for the work to which he will be assigned.—Evening News.

Rev. Dr. R. D. Smart, late of the Missouri Methodist Episcopal Conference, who has been transferred to the Virginia Conference, and is coming to Epworth church, Norfolk, next year, will not attend the annual session of Conference in Richmond, beginning this week. No reason is given other than Mr. Smart has no special interest in this session of the Conference. He will preach his first sermon as pastor of Epworth church November 30th. Dr. Smart is now visiting in Charleston, S. C. with Mrs. Smart and three youngest children.

The debt on Epworth church has been wiped out by the present pastor, the Rev. R. H. Bennett, who, some say should have been returned to Epworth next year. The last $5,000 was subscribed yesterday. The Rev. Mr. Bennett will get a very good Conference appointment this year.—News.

The News is informed from a reliable source that the doctor has advised the Rev. B. M. Beckham, of Danville, formerly pastor of Asbury Methodist church, this city, to take a rest for a year, owing to some trouble with his throat.

Mr. Beckham is the beloved pastor of Cabell Street Tabernacle, in Danville, and is held in high esteem by all denominations in that city.—Evening News.

The Ghent Methodist church will ask for a preacher at the coming Annual Conference to serve as a regular pastor for the new Conference year. The Sunday school, which meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the lecture room of the Central Baptist church, is in a most prosperous condition and efficient. Of course, while the temporary building is in course of erection, a place will be provided for holding of public worship on Sundays and on week days.

The action of the new Ghent Methodist church and the new Park Place Methodist church will increase the number of churches of that denomination in Norfolk to ten, giving the city ten Methodist pastors.

The following gentlemen compose the building committee: Mr. J. W. Grandy, chairman; Messrs. W. W. Vicar, W. L. Newell, W. J. Woodward and Mr. Harrison.—Virginian-Pilot.

The following resolutions were adopted at the Methodist preachers' meeting held to-day:

Whereas the session of our Methodist Conference concludes our immediate and continuous fellowship and association with Bro. L. W. Guyer, who has labored among us with great fidelity and efficiency for four consecutive years; therefore be it

Resolved, 1, That we assure him of our heartfelt sorrow occasioned by his necessary removal from our midst, and of our best wishes for a pleasant and successful pastorate next year, and moreover pray that the great head of the Church may continue to crown his labors with abundant success.

2. That these resolutions be published in our city papers and in our Conference organ, the Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

(Signed)

GEO. E. BOOKER.

J. A. THOMAS.

The official board and members of Laurel Street Methodist church will petition Bishop Duncon at the Conference next week to have the Rev. Henry E. Johnson, who has served this congregation so acceptably during the present year, returned as their pastor for another term. No preacher who has been assigned to this church has been more universally liked than Dr. Johnson. He is said to be not only a strong and powerful preacher, but is a profound thinker and a fearless man of God. His sermons are of the choicest kind, and he is a thoroughly hard worker. His ministry at Laurel Street has been eminently satisfactory. Rev. Mr. McGee, who is assisting the Rev. Dr. Henry E. Johnson at Laurel Street Methodist church in a series of meetings this week, is making a fine impression. His sermons are of a high order, and are being listened to by eager hearers. He preached last night from the words, "The Son of Man has come to seek and to save those that were lost," and there were several requests for prayer.—Richmond News.

CLOSED YEAR'S WORK.

Memorial M. E. church is in the most prosperous condition in its history. Societies raised $2,041.63, and the membership greatly increased.

At the close of this Conference year at Memorial M. E. church Sunday morning the following is a statement of the amount of money raised by the different societies of the church during the past year, which is said to be the largest amount raised in the history of the church:

Home missions .....	$ 421 64
Aid Society .....	39 42
Girls' Society, of which the Juvenile Society raised
$44.68 .....	1,129 89
Foreign Missionary Society....	110 68

Total amount .....$2,041 63
Five members were received at the evening service. Rev. W. A. Christian, the pastor, closed his year's work with a very able sermon last night. Rev. Christian is regarded as one of the most able ministers of the town, and his good work and outspoken policy against sin and corruption of any kind has won for him a host of friends throughout the town and in the other churches as well as his own.—Exchange.

The first business transacted at Monumental was the election of stewards, which resulted in the selection of W. A. West, H. F. A. Buff, C. A. Roane, Emmett Deans, C. E. Adams, T. G. Minton, W. R. Stevens, J. W. Leigh, B. F. Howell, John A. McDonald, J. H. Toomer, R. E. White, George L. Neville, W. H. Brittingham, M. F. Richardson, L. McK. Jack, A. V. Pearce, F. L. Crocker, G. A. G. Scott, Bascom Sykes, John H. Hall, J. H. Williams, J. S. Jenkins, J. W. Cowper, and G. G. Brooks; Recording Steward, G. A. G. Scott; District Steward, N. F. Richardson; alternate, George L. Neville.

The financial reports were satisfactory, and the affairs of the church shown to be in a flourishing condition.

Resolutions were adopted asking for the return of Pastor E. H. Rawlings, and also commending the work of the presiding elder, Rev. W. C. Vaden. The resolutions in regard to Mr. Vaden expressed the regret of the official board of the church that his term as presiding elder by limitation has expired.

The fiscal reports were all of a highly satisfactory nature, and the salaries of the pastor and presiding elder were reported as paid in full.—Exchange.

OFFICIAL FINANCIAL REPORT.

The following official reports that will go up to the Virginia Conference from the three leading Methodist churches in Norfolk—viz., Epworth, Cumberland Street and Centenary, will be of general interest to the large community of Methodists in this city and vicinity. These reports were prepared at the adjourned meeting of the Quarterly Conference of these churches last night, and are published as made out by the recording steward of each Conference:

REPORT OF EPWORTH CHURCH.

Epworth church sends up to Conference this year one of the very best reports in all its history. In accessions to membership, in money raised and in general prosperity, this is the case. The church was never in better condition. During the year seventy-four members have been received. All salaries and obligations have been met in full. There is reported a surplus over assessment on foreign missions of $169. The Sunday school has raised for foreign missions $166. Total amount raised for all purposes in the Sunday school is $700. There have been 150 conversions in the congregation during the year. The total amount of money raised for all purposes during the year is over $20,000. The great work of the year has been the relieving of the church from the grievous burden of a debt of $47,000 on the building. Of this over $42,000 was secured in the spring by the pastor and reported on Easter Sunday. In the past few days Mr. John H. Core, of our city, has signified his desire to place in the church a splendid memorial window in honor of his deceased wife, Mrs. Martha Core, and also to bequeath to Epworth church a legacy of $5,000 in her honor. At the official board meeting of the church last night this news was received with great pleasure, and a suitable expression of appreciation was directed to be sent to Mr. Core. This legacy covers the amount of the debt on the building.

CUMBERLAND STREET CHURCH.

The following amounts were collected during the year, as shown by the reports at the adjourned Quarterly Conference of Cumberland Street Methodist church last night: Missions, $945.30; Bishop's fund, $48; Conference claimants, $188; church extension, $88; building and repairing church and parsonage, $743; education, $53; Sunday school, $233.44; poor fund, $1,273.29; Annual Conference expenses, $19; Bible Society, $13; Orphanage, $313; other objects, $4,582.97. Total amount raised, $8,400.

The current expenses paid in full will leave $100 in the treasury.

Ninety additions to the church membership during the year.

The church owns property to the value of $83,000.

The Sunday school contributes for missions more than any other school in the Virginia Conference, the amount being $184.

The following stewards were elected last night: G. W. Camp, G. W. Gilbert, L. H. Whitehurst, E. J. Whitehurst, J. T. Philpots, W. H. Fletcher, W. J. Simmons, C. W. Pettit, W. E. Brown, J. T. Kegebein, J. E. McCoy, J. E. Petree, D. P. Reid, F. M. Smith, Walter Edwards, J. W. Hough, J. N. McBride, C. C. Gunther.

G. E. Smith was elected Sunday school superintendent.

The following resolutions were passed by the Quarterly Conference:

Whereas the year is drawing to a close, and our beloved pastor, Rev. C. L. Bane, is about to leave us for the seat of the Annual Conference;

Resolved, first, It is the sense of this body that our church has been blessed by his ministry and godly life among us. We recognize that through his pulpit efforts we have been spiritually built up; that in the performance of his pastoral work he has brought pleasure and comfort to us in our homes, and in every way he has benefited us, both as individuals and as a church.

Resolved, second, That we commend him to the presiding elder, the Bishop and his brethren of the Conference as a truly faithful laborer in the Master's vineyard; as one who "seeing his duty, performeth it with an eye single to the glory of God."

Resolved, third, That feeling that it has been a benediction to have had him as our pastor for the past year, we look forward to his return to us with pleasure.

Resolved, fourth, That we hereby make a formal request of our presiding elder to use his best endeavor to have Rev. C. L. Bane assigned to this pastoral charge for the next Conference year.

CENTENARY CHURCH.

The following is the report from Centenary church:

The church has paid $1,544.30 on debt, liquidating it in full, being the end of a debt fourteen years old of $6,000 originally. The deed of trust will be cancelled on the records to-day.

All collections were paid in full, with a surplus on missions of $40.

The Quarterly Conference at its adjourned meeting last night expressed a unanimous desire for the return of Mr. Dadmun as the pastor for the next Conference year.

The following were elected stewards: S. Q. Collins, L. W. White, S. B. Harrell, A. S. Cooper, W. H. Millar, H. E. Skinner, J. V. Seward, W. P. Dodson, W. G. Fearing, J. T. Godfrey, W. P. Earnest.

W. P. Dodson was elected Sunday school superintendent.—Exchange.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

The closing session of the Methodist preachers' meeting of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley and vicinity for the present Conference year was held in the room of the Young Men's Society of Cumberland Street church at 10:45 A. M. yesterday. Although many of the pastors of the city churches and preachers in charge of the various circuits on the two districts are busy closing up their year's work in order to leave for the Annual Conference to-day, there was a fair representation of the members present.

The meeting was presided over by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, and a fervent prayer was offered by Rev. C. H. McGhee, of the Lambert's Point M. E. church.

The most important matter that claimed the attention of the body was the question of presiding elders to serve the Norfolk and Eastern Shore and the Portsmouth districts for the ensuing four years, the terms of the present presiding elders, Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins and Rev. W. C. Vaden, having expired by the law of limitation.

It is generally known that the Virginia Conference as a body has by a large majority at its annual sessions for several years past put itself on record as opposed to a lifetime tenure of office in the presiding eldership, holding to the position that such a procedure is not in accordance with the spirit and genius of Methodism, which, under the laws of the Church, has as its system with reference to the terms of office of both presiding elders and preachers the itinerant law, which, under such law, changes the appointments of all preachers at the expiration of four years.

At the ministers' meeting held November 3d Rev. E. T. Dadmun was constituted a committee to draw up a preamble and resolution touching the subject giving the views and sentiments of the Methodist preachers on the same for adoption by the meeting, and on yesterday Mr. Dadmun presented the following paper:

Whereas a decided majority of the Virginia Conference is in favor of limiting the term of office of presiding elders to eight consecutive years; and

Whereas the terms of the presiding elders of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore districts expire this year by limitation; therefore,

Resolved, That the preachers' meeting of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley and vicinity respectfully request Bishop Duncan, our Presiding Bishop, to appoint to each of these districts a brother who has not been consecutively in the presiding eldership longer than eight years.

The paper was discussed by Revs. E. T. Dadmun, J. K. Joliff, W. R. Proctor, E. H. Rawlings and W. Asbury Christian, and then unanimously adopted.

On motion, Rev. W. A. Christian, Rev. E. T. Dadmun, and Rev. D. J. Traynham were appointed by the president a committee to present the above preamble and resolutions to Bishop Duncan at the Conference, which meets in Richmond to-morrow.

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

Reports from the churches were called for, and the following were heard from:

Rev. W. P. Jordan reported an excellent Sunday school at Park Place Sunday morning. He attended divine worship at the Baptist service, Twenty-eighth street, in the afternoon, and worshipped at the Park Place Presbyterian church Sunday evening.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun reported very large congregations at Centenary church morning and night. He has the cash in hand to pay off the entire indebtedness on the church. His Conference collections are all up in full with a surplus left over on missions amounting to about $40.

Rev. J. N. Latham had a most pleasant day at Park View Sunday. There was a very gratifying attendance at the Sunday school, and excellent congregations to hear him at both services. Rev. R. H. Bennett delighted a large audience at his church Thursday night with one of his lectures. Mr. Latham received four new members by

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago

Chicago, — From the example of martyrs and great sufferers in the cause of Christ Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage draws lessons of encouragement and fortitude for afflicted members of Christ's church; text, Philippians iv, 22, "All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Caesar's household."

Pope Leo XIII. was one day giving an audience to some foreigners. Turning to a gentleman present, he asked, "How long have you been in our city?" "Three days," was the answer. "Then," said the pope, "you have been here long enough to practically know all about Rome." He asked another gentleman, "How long have you been in Rome?" "Three months," was the answer. "Then," said the pope, "you have been here long enough to know that you have just begun to see Rome." He asked a third gentleman the same question. "I have been here three long years," was the answer. "Then," said the pope, "you have been here long enough to know that, though a man may live in Rome a hundred years, he can never live long enough to fully appreciate Rome." The longer one lives under the shadow of the Coliseum the more he realizes how much of history, of conquests and defeats, of culture and ignorance, of purity and vice, of justice and injustice, clusters about the seven hills of the Eternal City.

But, though the most marvelous achievements and the most startling happenings may be panoramaed in that one word, "Rome," yet without doubt to the Christian student the most absorbing and intense of all Roman eras is that which includes the history of Nero's reign. Then the persecutions against the early Christians became the most virulent, inhuman and fatal. Then the brutalities and mercilessness of the fiendish monster, Nero, out-Heroded even bloody Herod. Then the lowest dungeons of the inferno were filled with pandemoniums of satanic joy. "For then," wrote the historian, "the Christians were covered by the skins of wild beasts and torn to pieces by the dogs. Then they were crucified. Then they were smeared with pitch and combustible materials and burned in the imperial gardens at night. Then at last from a horror stricken nation there arose pity for the condemned, since they were not put to death for the public good, but to gratify the cruelty of one man." Yet Paul wrote about this time that, in spite of all these persecutions and martyrdoms, there still remained in Rome men and women who were true to the Christian faith. In the darkest days of the history of the early church there were Christians ready to testify for Jesus Christ, though they wore the uniforms of the Roman emperor and though, on account of that testimony, they knew they had to die.

A Modern Epistle.

Now, as Paul sent the salutations of the saints in Caesar's palace to the members of the Philippian church for their encouragement, I am going to bring the salutations of the saints who live in Caesar's modern palaces for the encouragement of every man, woman and child. I am going to declare to the young and the old, the rich and the poor, the high and the low alike, that, though some of you are having a hard time to maintain your Christian integrity against the bombardments of seemingly overwhelming worldly difficulties, yet there are men and women who are maintaining their Christian integrity against troubles infinitely greater than yours. There are men and women true to God today who have shouldered upon their backs a whole mountain range of misfortunes and sorrows and pains, while you, comparatively speaking, are going forth into the gospel fight weighted down only with a little knapsack. There are Christian men who, figuratively speaking, have been flung overboard mid-Atlantic and told to swim ashore, while you have only a shallow brook to cross. There are Christian men who are ankle deep, knee deep, waist deep, shoulder deep, chin deep in the quicksands of difficulties who can yet look up and see the face of God, while you, comparatively speaking, have only a stony path to climb. If the saints in Caesar's ancient and modern palaces could be true to their gospel faith, surely their spiritual examples ought to rouse every one of us to better and truer and purer and nobler efforts, no matter what our mental or physical or incidental difficulties may be.

I would encourage those Christians. In the first place, who are struggling against the physical depressions of ill health. Life even under the brightest of conditions is an awful struggle. Alexander Pope once compared the ceaseless struggle of life to a continuous journey over the bridge of time. Upon one end of this bridge the English poet started the different generations. Then he kept them moving on and on and on, never allowing the tired and footsore and headaching and heart-aching traveler to halt for an instant. He kept them moving on and on over the bridge of time until every boy and girl or young man and young woman or middle aged man and middle aged woman or sexagenarian or octogenarian or tottering centenarian had tumbled through the broken planks of that bridge into the dark waters of the river of death flowing below.

But though life is such an awful struggle for the broad chested and the stout limbed and the powerfully physiqued, yet, wonderful to say, some of the mightiest Christian heroes and heroines have been men and women who were physical weaklings. Some of the most famous mental and spiritual giants of the ages have been those whose physical frames were so frail that they could have been destroyed almost as easily as a dew-drop could be flung from the surface of a leaf or a humming bird's life could be crushed out between the thumb and the forefinger of a man's hand. John Summerfield's body was so frail that it withered away under the touch of consumption while he was yet a boy. John Summerfield died when he was but twenty-seven, yet he lived long enough, with that frail body, to bring the gospel message to the whole English speaking race of his time. Fanny Crosby, the inspired hymnologist, who has written over 5,000 hymns, by means of which many thousands of souls have nestled "Safe In the Arms of Jesus" (which is perhaps her most popular hymn), has such a weak, frail little body that there seems to be nothing to her physically, and in addition to her other physical infirmities God put out the light of her two eyes. And there she sits, in the darkness of her own room, in order that with her endless sockets she may better see the face of Jesus Christ. Frances E. Willard in all probability never saw a perfect well day in thirty years, yet with her weak body she headed one of the mightiest reform movements of her time. With her devoted companions she toured up and down this land, speaking in every town and city of 10,000 inhabitants or over. When she became too feeble to travel, in order to keep her from working her friends sent her across the seas. Yet even there, under the shadow of the trees, she would write her letters, which roused all the women of Christendom to better deeds for God and humanity.

To show what power this sickly little woman was able to exercise, a male auditor gave his impression of her to a friend in this way: "When she commenced to speak, I felt sorry for her. She seemed to be such a wee little bit of a sickly woman, so very frail and helpless, but when Frances E. Willard had been speaking a short time this wee little bit of a woman seemed to me to grow nine feet tall, and she seemed to have in her hand a battering ram with which she was pounding upon the door of my heart until I had to open it and let the Saviour in." To show what was the influence of this frail little woman and the work which she did I would quote a statement made by Wendell Phillips. He turned to a young man, who was complaining that there were no great reformers today, because there were no great reforms to champion, and said: "Young man, did you hear Frances E. Willard speak tonight? If you did, in that frail, little sick body you saw one of the mightiest powers for good this world has ever seen. You also saw her denouncing, perhaps, the mightiest curse of all ages, the curse of intoxicants. Go and do as the sickly Frances E. Willard is doing."

The Salutations of the Saints.

Now, to you who are sitting before me today with the pale face of an invalid I bring the salutations of the saints who have lived in the Caesarean palaces of physical infirmity. I would tell you to do something for God in spite of your bodily pain, as blind John Milton did; as Bella Cooke, who has been bedridden for over forty years, is doing; as Paul did, who was "in bodily presence weak." Your very physical sufferings ought to bring you closer to Christ. Your very sicknesses ought to make you the more anxious to do something for the Saviour now that your time on earth may be short. They ought to make you as anxious to do something for Christ as was the dying president of Union college, who, when his physician told him he had but one hour on earth to live, said, "Then place me upon my knees, that I may spend that hour in prayer with God, pleading for the salvation of sinful souls." Would that today, in the presence of these saints who have lived in the modern Caesar's palaces of physical torture, we might all consecrate our frail as well as our well bodies to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ!

I would encourage those Christians also who are trying to maintain their Christian integrity in spite of an evil past. By this statement I mean those Christians whose past sins have been heralded over the world, even as Cain's sin was known by the black mark which had been stamped upon the murderer's brow. If it is hard for a young girl to be good and pure and true when she is living in a Christian home and has practically never been out of her mother's care, how much harder must it be for a young girl to be good and true and pure when she has had her feet cut and lacerated by treading the crooked and stony pathway of sin and has had her fair name blackened by the condemnations of a dissolute life! If it is difficult for a young man to hold an honorable position in society when his record is clean and good, how much more difficult must it be for a man to attain an honorable life when he has served out his time in a felon's cell or has had his hair cropped by the convict's shears and his clothes striped with the marks of the penitentiary! If it is difficult for a Christian to live right whose nearest neighbors can find nothing but good to say of him and his past, how much more difficult must it be for a man to live a good life who has been a drunkard, a libertine, a thief, a social outcast! Would you, O Christian merchant, today be willing to have reformed ex-convicts as occupants of your office? Would you, O mother, allow reformed servants in your home whose past lives have been dissolute? "No," in all probability you would both answer in an un-Christian way: "I do not bear such people any ill will, but I would prefer not to have them around my person. They might steal or perhaps they might lead my children astray, and were such among my help I would dismiss them at once."

Some time ago I stood in the store of a personal friend. While there a gentleman who was a member of the Chicago detective force entered to buy some goods. This officer sharply looked at one of the clerks. Then he came over to the merchant's side and said: "Mr. So-and-so, that clerk is an ex-convict. He served a term in Joliet penitentiary. You had better keep an eye upon him." Although that ex-convict was a good clerk and had been in the employ of my friend for nearly two years, he was immediately discharged. When I spoke up in his favor and begged that he be retained and given a chance to live a good life, my friend answered: "No, Mr. Talmage; that man is able to steal every year thousands of dollars without my knowing it. I cannot run the risk." So the poor clerk was driven out of that store and perhaps driven into a future of crime.

Sinking an Evil Past.

But though it is so difficult for a man to lead a Christian life who has had an evil past, yet if there are any such here today I bring to you the salutations of the saints in Caesar's palace. I want to encourage you with the fact that, just as some of the greatest of moral heroes have been physical weaklings, so some of the greatest of Christian heroes have been those who have sinned even worse than you have sinned. Harry Monroe, who for years has run the Pacific Garden mission of Chicago and who has been instrumental in saving thousands of souls, was—what? A college graduate? A member of a Christian church and a Christian home? No. He was a converted gambler. Jerry McAuley of New York, who did so much for the slums of New York, was a drunkard and a prize-fighter. John Newton was once vilely dissolute and depraved, though in after life he wrote the noted hymn:

I saw One hanging on a tree
In agony and blood,
Who fixed his languid eyes on me
As near the cross I stood.

Sure never till my latest breath
Can I forget that look;
It seemed to charge me with his death,
Though ne'er a word he spoke.

John Newton said that when he first saw Christ hanging there upon the cross he himself was wallowing in the lowest depths of sin. John Bunyan the dreamer was John Bunyan the blasphemer. John Summerfield, the

A NOTE OF FEAR.

Some of our friends in the local Royal Arch are contemplating a time of feasting in the immediate future. It is well to eat, drink and be merry, but the example of the Chaldeans in the time of Belshazzar is not one to be imitated. There are too many menses, tekkel upharsin signs on the wall to justify a liquor man sitting down in peace and contentment. True the Legislature has adjourned, but its works live after it. In fact, feasting and revelry are not pertinent more than once a year in these troublous times of taxation, turbulence and fanatical legislation.—Wine and Spirit News.

The Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate has now a regular temperance department, entitled, appropriately, "The Common Enemy."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

certificate and one on profession of faith.

At Cumberland Street church Rev. C. L. Bane had a profitable day, with a large Sunday school and two very fine congregations to hear him morning and evening. He asked for a special collection of $200 for a special purpose, and received $300, $100 more than asked for. The church has paid up on all of her assessments in full, leaving a handsome surplus in the treasury for missions. He will carry up a clean report to Conference.

Rev. Asbury Christian had a good day at Memorial church, Berkley. All assessments against the church have been paid in full, leaving a handsome surplus. He received Sunday five new members by certificate.

Rev. J. W. Crider had a pleasant day Sunday. He listened to two excellent sermons, one by Rev. C. L. Bane, at Cumberland Street, in the morning, and one at Epworth at night, by Rev. R. H. Bennett.

Rev. J. B. Merritt had a most interesting day at the Seamen's Bethel Sunday; good attendance and profitable services.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had a most delightful day at Lambert's Point church Sunday, good congregations being present at both services. He received eight new members by certificate and two on profession of faith. All assessments laid upon the church for the various benevolent purposes of the church have been paid in full with a neat surplus left over from the missionary collection.

Rev. R. H. Bennett will carry up to Conference the best financial and numerical report in the history of Epworth church. There have been seventy-four additions to the church during the year. One of the members of the church has given a legacy of $5,000 to the church, which wipes out the entire indebtedness on the church, amounting to about $48,000. Mr. Bennett had a fine congregation to hear him Sunday morning and at night a most flattering one, the church being full. He received six new members on profession of faith.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings reported an excellent day at Monumental Sunday. There are 490 members on the Sunday school roll. He is closing up the year's work finely; all collections have been paid in full, and a handsome surplus left over from the missionary collection. The Epworth League is doing a good work.

At Huntersville church Sunday the pastor, Rev. E. K. Odell, preached morning and night to good congregations. There were five conversions at the evening service. He received three new members on profession of faith.

Rev. J. K. Joliff had most interesting services at Queen Street church Sunday, and much interest manifested. He received four new members by certificate, and one on profession of faith.

The Sunday school at Port Norfolk was well attended, and Rev. Daniel T. Merritt was greeted with fine congregations at both services. He had one conversion at night. All Conference collections have been paid in full, and the church is in a fine spiritual condition.

Sunday was rally missionary day with the Sunday school at McKendree church, and the rally was a great success. Rev. W. R. Proctor had large congregations to hear him. He received one new member by certificate.

The Methodist preachers will not meet again until after the adjournment of Conference, when it will be reorganized for the new year by the election of a new set of officers.—Virginian Pilot.

VIRGINIA METHODISTS.

With the singing of "Blest be the tie that binds," or the equally familiar hymns, "Coronation," or "And are we yet alive," in a mighty volume by more than three hundred male voices, the Virginia Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will begin a week of daily sessions in this city at the Broad Street church on Wednesday. Bishop Wallace W. Duncan, of Mississippi, will rap the greatest State body of Southern Methodists to order, and the Conference will get down to work.

The singing by this great body of men, nearly all of whom are accustomed to public singing and familiar with the old hymns that for a century or more have uttered God's praise, is always a feature of the Conference. It is a mighty sweep of song, full of feeling and spontaneity, at this annual reunion of men who are a band of brothers with common hopes, common labors, the same joys and sorrows, all laboring in a great cause. There are tears of gratitude in many eyes, and few can see and hear the beloved men who for years have ministered to their own and their parents' spiritual needs without being moved by the sight and by the overflowing joy on the faces of the preachers as they meet and greet again their co-laborers and lifelong friends. There will be a few familiar faces missing from the throng, and there will be others present, but with the shadow of a great sorrow upon them, due to the loss of some of their loved ones who were with them last Conference, but now are missing.

MUST STAND EXAMINATION.

The chief work of the Conference consists of the examination of applicants for admission on trial to the work of the ministry; the examination of those who have been on trial for advancement in their holy calling, and of those who are candidates for deacon's and elder's orders. These examinations are conducted by the committees constituted for the work, who report to the Conference, by whom their recommendations are usually ratified.

Then the ministers make reports of the work of the charges in which they have been laboring during the year, and pass examinations as to character. Their presiding elders usually testify for them; very rarely is it necessary for the elder to bear witness against them. If charges are made reflecting upon the character of any, or militating against his usefulness as a preacher or pastor, the preacher accused is tried by the committee, or, if necessary, by the Conference. So far as known, there are no charges calling for trial to be prosecuted at this session.

THE IMPORTANT COMMITTEES.

Reports are prepared and offered on education, finance, temperance, and various phases of Church work, and these are acted on by the Conference, sometimes precipitating spirited debates. This is true of the reports on temperance and education and publishing interests. So far as known, however, the coming session is to be a tranquil and busy one, devoid of anything in any wise bordering on the sensational.

Late in the session a time is usually set apart for memorials to deceased members, at which time loving tributes are paid to the men whose earthly labors have ceased. Some of the most eloquent and affecting addresses of the entire Conference are heard at these memorial services. Few have passed away since the last gathering.

THE ASSIGNMENT OF WORK.

The feature of the Conference in point of public interest and the interest of the preachers themselves is reserved for the closing session of the Conference—the decree of the Bishop assigning the pastors to their field for the ensuing year. As stated in this paper recently, there are but ten of the 300 pastors who have served out the four-year limit in their pastorates, and four of these are presiding elders. There will probably be more than this number of changes, however, possibly as many as fifty, or even a hundred changes. These are due to the retirement for various reasons of ministers from the active work; to the exigencies of the ministry, and the peculiar fitness of preachers for urban or rural service, as their experiences may have demonstrated.

RUMORED RICHMOND CHANGES.

Among the changes that will probably be made, several are in Richmond pastorates. Rev. Joseph D. Langley, who will locate for a year, will, it is expected, be succeeded in the pastorate of St. James by Rev. Graham H. Lambeth, now stationed in Norfolk. Rev. J. E. Oyler, of the Denny Street church, does not expect to return to that charge, preferring rural to urban work. Who will succeed him there is not yet known. Rev. W. W. Lear, pastor of Centenary; Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, pastor of Broad Street, and nearly all the other Richmond pastors will probably be returned to their charges. Generally, unless there is a decided preference on the part of the congregation or the pastor, and unless he has developed unfitness for the peculiar conditions and needs of the flock, pastors are returned.

Men learned in the history, laws and polity of the Church, and old in its service are usually chosen presiding elders, for these are positions of great responsibility. Among those who have served longest as elders are Rev. J. Powell Garland, D. D., and Rev. Joseph H. Amiss, both of whom will probably be continued in this connection. Rev. W. W. Tudor, D. D., presiding elder of one of the Richmond districts, will, it is expected, continue in the eldership.

SOME PASTORAL PRIZES.

The pastorates of the Epworth church, at Norfolk; the Court Street church, at Lynchburg; Centenary, Richmond, and one of the Petersburg churches are generally regarded as the most desirable in the Conference, but there are many others nearly or quite as prominent. Since the last Conference the pastor of Epworth, Norfolk, Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., has been elevated to the episcopacy, and Rev. Richard H. Bennett, the associate pastor, has since been in charge. Mr. Bennett may be made the regular pastor, or some one of the older preachers may be assigned to the work there. It has been reported that a prominent Methodist from another Conference is to be transferred to this Conference, and that he may be assigned to Epworth, but no one can know yet what is to be done. Dispatch.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)
November 5, 1902.

The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions, which has for its object the promotion of interest in foreign missions among the women of this country, the increase of their interest in the moral condition of their less fortunate sisters in heathen countries, and the encouragement of enthusiasm among American children for foreign missionary work, convenes in Washington to-day. The program includes the names of some of the most prominent workers in foreign and American missionary fields. The meeting will be presided over by President Samuel B. Capen, LL. D., and Rev. Jas. L. Barton, will participate. Dr. Barton was a missionary in Turkey from 1885 to 1892, and has since been a member of deputations to Japan, Mexico and India, and is regarded as a specialist on missionary work. Among the speakers will be Miss Ellen M. Stone, whose comparatively recent experiences in Turkey are well known. Another will be Miss Susan D. Riggs, a native of Sivas, Western Turkey. She has been connected with the Western Turkey missions under the American Board since 1892. Dr. Julia Bissel, a native of Ahmednagar, India, will read an interesting paper. She is a missionary physician, having obtained her education at Wellesley College, and her professional degree at the Woman's Medical College of Philadelphia. Mrs. Frances Clark, wife of the founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, has been engaged with her husband for many years in Christian Endeavor work, having accompanied him on most of his journeys during the past twenty years. Miss Alice M. Kyle will give a summary of the foreign work of the board, after which Miss Gertrude R. Hance, of Esidumbini, South Africa, will deliver an address, entitled "Thirty Years Among the Zulus." The members of the organization in Washington have made every provision for the entertainment and comfort of the visitors, and a most successful meeting is anticipated.

One of the most interesting sermons delivered in Washington last Sunday was that of Prof. G. F. Wright, of Oberlin College. It dealt with his personal experiences in Japan, China, Mongolia, Manchuria, Siberia, Turkestan, Trans-Caucassia, Russia and Palestine. Prof. Wright delivered lectures before not less than 20,000 Japanese of the better classes. He and his son were in China during the Boxer uprising. Prof. Wright described a Christian girls' school, where he found upwards of 400 pupils who had been cast out to die by their parents. Throughout his travels he found that the Christian villages were far superior to others, and that the people were all possessed of greater morality and a higher order of intelligence. Prof. Wright made the somewhat surprising statement that Russia was doing in Manchuria only what the United States was doing in the Isthmus of Panama—namely, protecting her rights guaranteed by solemn treaty. He said that before Russian occupation the only protection to travellers was from robber trusts with whom the traveller had to make terms at exorbitant figures, and that entitled him to fly the flag of the bandit trust from his caravan thereafter, which flag was respected by the other bandits.

The Young Men's Christian Association held another big meeting on Sunday afternoon. The speaker was Rev. C. A. Barbour, of Rochester, N. Y., and his subject was "Man's Greatest Battle." He urged in rounded periods and eloquent terms that the young men of the age make a gallant fight against sin. Referring to the prevailing spirit of agnosticism, he related an anecdote. He said that two men were travelling, and one of them had declared that he was not a Christian, because he did not believe in following a faith which he could not understand. He did not believe in mysteries. The other called his attention to some grazing cattle, and inquired if he believed in them. The first speaker replied that he did. His friend replied: "If you believe in them and understand them, please explain to me how it is that the grass they are eating makes hair in their case, but wool on the sheep and feathers on the goose?" He could not explain, but he was then and there converted.

The faculty of the Sunday Teachers' Normal College held its first formal meeting on Monday evening, enrolling pupils and making arrangements for the first class evening, which will occur on November 10th. The subject of that evening will be "The Structure of the Bible," by Rev. Dr. Schick, pastor of the President's church. The thesis will occupy about forty-five minutes, and will be followed by a fifteen minute lesson in psychology, conducted by Dr. Laws. After this will come general discussion. Dr. J. E. Gilbert, dean of the college, speaks enthusiastically of the prospects for the year's work.

The Salvation Army has determined upon a scheme which gives promise of gratifying material results. It will consist of buying up various articles which can be utilized. Furniture, clothing, etc., which can be improved by repair, will be repaired and sold again, the work giving employment to many indigent people. The Army solicitors will also make rubbish canvasses from house to house soliciting old and unused articles. Much debris can thus be collected, it is believed, which is more of an incumbrance than an asset to its owner, and, by the organization of the army, can be converted into a salable product or distributed to the needy. The scheme is now in practical operation in New York, and will be gladly accepted, and that which cannot be otherwise utilized will be sorted up into old brass, iron, glass, kindling wood, etc., and sold to dealers in those articles.

LIU WU YUAN—A CHINESE BOY HERO.

By Mary Porter Gamewell.

A great burning had consumed large sections of the city of Peking. The lookout on the peak of the church dome in the Methodist mission reported, and anxious comrades climbed to watch with him as, one after another, columns of smoke and flame arose to cloud the sky or illumine the night, until in Peking every building of the hated foreigner was destroyed except those in that section of the city inclosed within the legation lines, and those of the Methodist mission where were congregated about seventy missionaries of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational missions, with six or seven hundred native Christians.

There was much concern on the part of the missionaries for those Chinese Christians living near the burned mission premises. One day Dr. Ament, a man of fine nerve and generous devotion to his people, sallied forth to learn, if he could, somewhat concerning the Christians in the neighborhood of the Congregational mission, about one mile distant from the Methodist mission. On his return he was followed by a boy, who kept out of his sight until near the gate of the Methodist mission, which gate was strongly guarded, and through which no strangers might enter. He then advanced, and, with anxiety and entreaty written all over his worn, begrimed countenance, said: "Please, sir, take me through the gate with you."

Dr. Ament, who could recall no face of his people which resembled that of this very dirty and rather disreputable looking boy, asked: "And who are you?" The boy replied: "Yur Sunday school boy. Don't you know me?" and went on eagerly to probe his teacher's mind with suggestions of the past that might recall the memory of his face and insure him an entrance through the gate—"A heathen shopkeeper near the Congregational mission." "A prentice boy in that shop." "The boy came to the Sunday school for heathen children." "I am that boy." Then joy, he is recognized! He enters the gate. He tells his story from the outbreak to date. The shopkeeper found that all who had had touch of any kind, no matter how remote, with foreigners were in danger. He was uneasy about this apprentice who had been to Sunday school. Finally he cast him out, and put him in the streets, already filled with Boxers, who were burning and slaying.

The boy, with craft and swift ingenuity, ran in the rear of the raging mob and shouted and gesticulated as if one of them, and thus escaped notice. Most of the night he ran and shouted, and finally slipped into hiding. From his hiding place he espied Dr. Ament, and, dodging from cover to cover, at last discovered himself to the doctor when in sight of the gate of the Methodist mission.

A few days later Baron von Kettler was shot in the street, and the clouds settled yet more ominously about the foreigners in Peking. Mr. Conger sent a summons to the missionaries to come at once into the legation lines. The message closed with words that rolled from burdened hearts a load of anxious care.

Formerly there had been no room in the legation lines for the Chinese Christians, and missionaries questioned concerning the possibilities when might come an order to move that could not include the native Christians. Now the order had come, and the final words of blessed good cheer were, "Bring your native Christians with you."

When missionaries and native Christians, at an hour's notice, marched out in long line guarded by brave men in blue—our United States marines—Liu Wu Yuan was with them.

In the afternoon of the same day that saw the missionaries and native Christians within the legation lines, the storm broke in fury. Chinese soldiers, armed with modern rifles and what proved to be an inexhaustible supply of ammunition, surrounded the legations, loopholed houses, built barricades, and from houses and barricades poured deadly fire into the legations day and night. To the rifle fire was added the roar of artillery, the crash of solid shot, and the scream of shell.

Days passed into weeks, and weeks into months, and no word came from the outside world. Many messengers had been sent out, but none had returned. One day Liu Wu Yuan said that he would undertake to carry a message to Tien Tsin and bring word back. The story runs that some one remarking his poor condition, said: "Why, you are half dead now!" to which he replied: "All right, so much less of me to get killed."

In the middle of the night they let him down from the city wall with a rope. He was made up as a beggar, and carried a letter wrapped in oil paper in the bottom of a bowl, and over the letter so protected, porridge was poured. By accident the bowl was broken; but this boy, who had already proven himself resourceful, managed to conceal the letter, and by slow stages to make his way to Tien Tsin. He travelled eighty miles through a country swarming with the enemy, with his life in jeopardy every instant. He was still in peril when he approached the foreigner's lines at Tien Tsin, but with stolid front and the same cool courage and ready ingenuity with which he had braved other perils, he faced this and entered Tien Tsin to the joy of friends there, who read eagerly the letters which assured them and all the Christian world that the besieged were yet alive. Letters for Peking were written, and with them concealed upon his person, Liu Wu Yuan started upon the perilous return trip, which must be made before the full measure of his undertaking was accomplished.

Hiding in cornfields, slinking into ditches, dodging through ruined villages, making wide detours to avoid Chinese troops, often narrowly escaping capture, hungry and suffering from heat and thirst, worn, but undaunted, on he came, until once more he appeared in the legations, reduced by hardship and suffering to a gaunt, haggard image of the original boy, but a hero indeed.

Such is the story of a heathen boy, who was thrust into the streets where death raged, because he loved the Sunday schools, and of how he repaid many fold the care he had received at the hands of his missionary friends.

He is still with the Christians with whom his lot was cast when the storm first burst over Peking, and we trust that his steps are in the way that leads to the gates of the Eternal City.

A MAGAZINE THIRTY YEARS OLD.

The Christmas (December) number of The Delineator is also the thirtieth anniversary number.

To do justice to this number, which for beauty and utility touches the highest mark, it would be necessary to print the entire list of contents. It is sufficient to state that in it the best modern writers and artists are generously represented. The book contains over 230 pages, with 34 full-page illustrations, of which 20 are in two or more colors. The magnitude of this December number, for which 728 tons of paper and six tons of ink have been used, may be understood from the fact that 91 presses running 14 hours a day have been required to print it; the binding alone of the edition of 915,000 copies representing over 20,000,000 sections which had to be gathered individually by human hands.

saint, about whom we have already spoken, was John Summerfield the de praved. Saul the chief of sinners became Paul the martyred saint. Oh, my brother, if the grace of God could come into such sinful lives and recreate and sustain them, surely the grace of God is sufficient to recreate and sustain us, no matter how black may have been our dissolute past.

And I bring to you who have an evil past this message from the saints in Caesar's palace, because the man who has publicly sinned, the man who has been loathsomely vile, is the man who has an especial mission to save souls for Jesus Christ. You know as no one else knows how awful is the power of temptation. You know as no one else knows how difficult it is for one who has been a social outcast to try to live again among respectable social surroundings. You can speak as Mary Magdalene could speak. You can plead as St. Delia could plead, who was once the noted Blue Bird, the fiend of the New York slums. Although St. Delia had such an evil past, yet her life, under the power of the Holy Ghost, became so pure and sweet and influential that the rich and the poor, the pure and the depraved alike, the old as well as the young, sobbed over her casket. You can speak from the heart, as John B. Gough spoke to the drunkards, because you yourself have seen the phantoms of delirium tremens moving themselves aright in the cup until at last they would bite like a serpent and sting like an adder. Struggling Christians, you who have had an evil past, you can plead for Christ in the highways and the hedges of sin as the saints who had an evil past could speak in Caesar's palace. Those saints today are now placing their hands of holy ordination upon your head that you may go forth and save your sinful fellow men.

Encouragement For the Unfortunate.

I would also encourage today those Christians who are compelled by force of circumstances to live and work with evil associates. Perhaps the young man who is standing behind the same counter with you in the store is an infidel; perhaps some of your classmates at school or in college are out and out scoffers against the word of God; perhaps your own father and brothers are unbelievers and every day your faith in Jesus Christ is made an object of ridicule; perhaps, what is the worst of all, you find that you are married to a man who never neglects an opportunity to ridicule your Bible. You have found out also that your husband is having a pernicious and spiritually destroying influence over your children. What are you going to do—leave these evil associates? Sometimes such a course is possible; sometimes it is not. It evidently was not possible for the ancient saints to have left Caesar's palace, else they would have done so. It is most natural to suppose that those saints would have instantly fled from the Roman capital during the time of Nero's persecution if they could have run away with honor and self respect. But in all probability most of those saints said to themselves something like this: "No; I cannot, I will not, go! It would be cowardly for me to desert my Lord and Master. I will stay here and keep on testifying for Christ, if need be, until my body is burned at the stake or eaten by the wild beasts in one of the arenas. And stay in Rome these saints did, and die a martyr's death most of them also did. So it may be your Christian duty to keep on living for Christ and testifying of his love in a place of persecution and among companions who make Christ an object of daily ridicule, as did the persecuted young Roman officers whose epitaph can still be read in one of the Roman cemeteries in these words: "He lived long enough to shed his blood for Christ."

Now, I want you, my Christian friends, you who are experiencing these daily persecutions, to fully realize that not one drop of blood which fell from the Christian martyrs of Caesar's ancient palace was ever shed in vain. From those persecutions the great influence of the church of Jesus Christ was started. From those persecutions were lighted the gospel torches which are today shedding their glorious rays all round the world. From those persecutions came not so much Paul's death and the death of the saints in Caesar's palace as the eternal life of millions upon millions of immortal souls. So if you, O persecuted Christian, only keep true to the gospel faith in the difficult places where you are stationed you may not only win your father and mother and husband and children for God, but you may win thousands upon thousands of immortal souls for Christ—beings whose names you have never read and whose glowing faces perhaps you shall never see until you look upon them among the redeemed before the great white throne.

Familiar Faces in Caesar's Palace.

So, I repeat, this glorious text brings the salutations of the saints in Caesar's palace to the rich and the poor, the high and the low, the old and the young alike. It brings its salutations to the rich and the great men. There were many great men and women in Caesar's household who were without doubt members of the household of faith. Nero's household, intellectually and financially, was the noted court of its day. And some of the saints in Caesar's palace must have been numbered among the princes and princesses of the realm and among the great commanders of the Roman legion, the cabinet officials and the members of the privy council. So we find today, among the great and the famous of the earth, there have been saints in Caesar's palace. Witness William McKinley, shot down by an assassin's bullet, calmly turning his face toward his invalid wife, saying, "God's will, not ours, be done." Witness Stonewall Jackson, leaving his army hat outside of his tent as a sign that he did not wish to be interrupted because he was then on his knees to God in prayer. Witness Neal Dow and Frederick Robertson and William E. Gladstone and Thomas Chalmers and John Knox and a whole army of earthly saints of whom the world was not worthy. These are some of the famous modern saints who have already won immortal fame by laying down their lives for Christ.

But I also find that in Nero's ancient palace there were slaves as well as rich nobles. There were menials who had to perform the most humble services, as well as generals who commanded Nero's armies or prime ministers who decided the international policies or financial ministers who levied the taxes. There were the cooks and the chambermaids. There were the porters and the gardeners and the messengers, the private guards and the negro servants, as well as the white servants. There were the scullions, as well as the ladies in waiting, who stood by the empress' side, and the saints in Caesar's palace were in all probability found in the kitchen as well as in the parlor, in the servant's livery as well as in the courtier's uniform. All of which proves that God is ready to honor the man of one talent, if he is a saint, just as much as he honors the man of ten talents who makes spiritual use of his genius.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.
Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.
Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.
2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.
3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

REPORT OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

(The Conference ordered that the report of the Board of Education and the report of the Conference Secretary of Education be published in the Advocate, Recorder, and Methodist. The report, therefore, is given in full—first, the report of the chairman, Dr. Young; second, the report of the Conference Secretary of Education, Rev. James Cannon, Jr.; third, the resolutions adopted by the Conference.)

Dr. Young read the report of the Board of Education, as follows:

It is one of the inspiring signs of the times to note the increasing interest in the subject of education throughout the country, especially in the South. Everywhere is an evident desire to enlarge the facilities of the schools where needed, to improve the qualifications of the teachers and to increase the attendance, in order that the advantages of education may be brought to all who are willing or capable of receiving them. In view of these conditions, new obligations rest upon the Church, first to bring Christian and moral influences into the public and other State schools, and to make our Church in all respects to equal or be superior to the secular schools.

In order to do this, we must do all we can to make prompt collection of the twentieth century subscriptions; and at the same time increase our annual contributions to the cause of education and do all we can to add to the endowment of our institutions of learning, not only our colleges, but our preparatory schools as well.

But, in addition to this, we must seek to create among our people an earnest desire to give their children the advantage of higher education, and especially of that higher education in our Methodist schools. In these days of unbelief and the condoning of things on the border land of the immoral, it is necessary and our duty to provide for education under conditions which will ensure the moral and Christian, as well as the intellectual and the physical training of the young of the land. It is important for every reason that we sustain our Church schools.

The chairman would call attention with pleasure and gratitude of the generous offer of Mr. John P. Branch, and would express the earnest hope that this offer will be met with such liberality on the part of the Conference at large in the bounds of our Conference as will give to the college at Ashland an endowment that will make it possible to give education free of cost to all who may apply. The board would recommend the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we highly appreciate the kind offer of Bro. John P. Branch to give one dollar for every two given by the Church, until he shall have given $100,000; that we urge upon all our people, particularly upon those able to give large sums, a quick and liberal response to this proposition, and that we pledge ourselves to do all we can to make effective this offer.

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL.

No wiser work has been attempted in recent years than the organization of the Correspondence School of Theology by our last General Conference. The work of preparing the Conference course of study may now be conducted under the direction of the professors of the theological department of Vanderbilt University, and with such help as will make this course of study mean vastly more in the future than in the past; and, at the same time, those who have finished the course of study will have the opportunity for guidance in the study of such books as may from time to time represent the trend of modern religious thought. In this connection it is a pleasure to note the probability of the formation of a post-graduate institute in the membership of our Conference. These institutions have been very helpful to our brethren in other Conferences, and are fully commended by our educational authorities.

The Board would report that the order of the Conference for the distribution of the funds and subscriptions of the twentieth century collection to the various institutions, was carried out by the appointment of an auditing committee, consisting of W. J. Young, Richard Irby, and George P. Adams, which met at Blackstone in February, and "after a thorough examination," found that the books had been properly kept, and that all money was accounted for, either in cash or receipts from the various institutions to which money had been paid. The committee distributed the cash and subscriptions, and made full and final settlement with the treasurer.

The schools of the Randolph-Macon system have entered upon a year of large prosperity. The college at Ashland, under the management of the new president, R. E. Blackwell, who so long has served the college well, and who has entered upon his duties with earnestness and faithfulness, has a better attendance than for some years past, and the spirit of the school at this time is excellent.

THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE.

The Woman's College at Lynchburg is overcrowded, is doing excellent work, and is attracting the attention of the best educators throughout our State and the South.

The academy at Bedford has an increased attendance, and is faithfully doing a needed work. The Danville Institute is under good management, and a skilful corps of teachers. All the schools are in every way worthy of your support.

The Blackstone Female Institute is the property of our Church, and continues to have a phenomenal success, of which its management proves itself in every way worthy.

The Methodists of the Charlottesville district are moving in the direction of the founding of a district preparatory school, which they believe to be much needed in that part of the Conference, and our brethren of the Rappahannock district have purchased the school building at Bowling Green, and have secured a charter for a school under the control of trustees elected by the District Conference. The secretary of the board will report the action of the board in regard to both these schools.

The president of the board would state his personal sense of loss in the death of Captain Richard Irby, who so long served the cause of education in the bounds of our Conference, and was a member of this board at his death; and also, while extending congratulations to Dr. A. Coke Smith, our late president, upon his election to a higher office, express regret that the Conference must lose his valuable services in this special direction.

Special resolutions of a suitable character will be reported by the secretary of the Board in both these cases.

REPORT OF THE CONFERENCE SECRETARY OF EDUCATION.

Rev. James Cannon, Jr., the Conference Secretary of Education, read the report, as follows:

At the end of four years of service the Conference secretary of education begs leave to submit to the Conference some facts in reference to the great work with which he has been connected by the action of your body, and to present some conclusions drawn therefrom:

The papers are full of the great educational awakening in the South, and are appealing to the people as citizens to supply funds by local and State taxation to furnish their children better training. We read of the Ogden movement of the Southern Education Board, of the General Education Board, and only this week of the work of the Baptist Association in this field, and we rejoice in these signs of awakening, and most earnestly should we labor to stimulate and develop every good movement of this kind, and to awaken our own people to a deeper realization of their great duty. But it is not right to ignore the fact that what we have seen spoken of in the papers as a new movement is not new among us. If a man will read over the reports on education, published in our minutes for the last quarter of a century, he will find that the Church has been proclaiming these things for years, and that she has been putting the leaven in the meal, which is now leavening the whole mass. Nor is it right to ignore the fact that for the latter part of this time much more has been done than to write reports. Many of the reports could never have been written had it not been for the fact that work had been done which made such reports possible. It is easy to forget the pit out of which one has come only a little while back, and to speak lightly, sometimes complainingly, almost despairingly, of our present condition, although it is a far more desirable and encouraging condition than any we have ever known.

TWENTY YEARS' ADVANCE.

No candid man can carefully survey the whole field of educational development in the entire South and not be obliged to say with Professor Quarles, of Washington and Lee University, speaking in this city, at Richmond College, concerning our education work, "That our advance in the last score of years has been the marvel of our educational history, possessing a system of concatenated schools and colleges without a rival in the South." Why did Professor Quarles say that? What work has been accomplished? In the last fifteen years our school work has developed from one college, for boys and men combined, with 110 students and property amounting to $75,000, to one college for men with 123 students, one college for women, with 270 students.

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

AS CRAIG LISTENED to the account of the fight he tried hard not to approve, but he could not keep the gleam out of his eyes, and as I pictured Graeme dashing back the crowd thronging the barricade till he was brought down by the chair Craig laughed gently and put his hand on Graeme's knee, and as I went on to describe my agony while Idaho's fingers were gradually nearing the knife his face grew pale and his eyes grew wide with horror.

"Baptiste here did the business," I said, and the little Frenchman nodded complacently and said:

"Dat's me for sure."

"By the way, how is your foot?" asked Graeme.

"He's fuss rate. Dat's what you call—one bite of—of—dat feel bees. He's dere; you put your finger dere, he's not dere. What you call him?"

"Flea!" I suggested.

"Oui!" cried Baptiste. "Dat's one bite of flea."

"I was thankful I was under the barrels," I replied, smiling.

"Oui! Dat's mak me ver mad. I 'mup and swear mos awful bad. Dat's pardon me, M'sieu Craig, heb?"

But Craig only smiled at him rather sadly.

"It was awfully risky," he said to Graeme, "and it was hardly worth it. They'll get more whisky, and anyway the league is gone."

"Well," said Graeme, with a sigh of satisfaction, "it is not quite such a one sided affair as it was."

And we could say nothing in reply, for we could hear Nixon snoring in the next room, and no one had heard of Billy, and there were others of the league that we knew were even now down at Slavin's. It was thought best that all should remain in Mr. Craig's shack, not knowing what might happen, and so we lay where we could, and we needed none to sing us to sleep.

When I awoke, stiff and sore, it was to find breakfast ready and old man Nelson in charge. As we were seated Craig came in, and I saw that he was not the man of the night before. His courage had come back; his face was quiet and his eye clear. He was his own man again.

"Geordie has been out all night, but has failed to find Billy," he announced quietly.

We did not talk much. Graeme and I worried with our broken bones, and the others suffered from a general morning depression. But after breakfast, as the men were beginning to move, Craig took down his Bible, and, saying, "Wait a few minutes, men," he read slowly, in his beautiful, clear voice, that psalm for all fighters,

"God is our refuge and strength," and so on to the noble words:

"The Lord of Hosts is with us;

The God of Jacob is our refuge."

How the mighty words pulled us together, lifted us till we grew ashamed of our ignoble rage and of our ignoble depression!

AND WHEN CRAIG prayed in simple, straightgoing words. There was acknowledgment of failure, but I knew he was thinking chiefly of himself; there was gratitude, and that was for the men about him, and I felt my face burn with shame; there was a petition for help, and we all thought of Nixon and Billy and the men wakening from their debauch at Slavin's this pure, bright morning. Then he asked that we might be made faithful and worthy of God, whose battle it was. Then we all stood up and shook hands with him in silence, and every man knew a covenant was being made. But none saw his meeting with Nixon. He sent us all away before that.

Nothing was heard of the destruction of the hotel stock in trade. Unpleasant questions would certainly be asked, and the proprietor decided to let bad alone. On the point of respectability the success of the ball was not conspicuous, but the antileague men were content if not jubilant.

Billy Breen was found by Geordie late in the afternoon in his own old and deserted shack, breathing heavily, covered up in his filthy, moldering bedclothes, with a half empty bottle of whisky at his side. Geordie's grief and rage were beyond even his Scotch control. He spoke few words, but these were of such concentrated vehemence that no one felt the need of Abe's assistance in vocabulary.

Poor Billy! We carried him to Mrs. Mavor's home, put him in a warm bath, rolled him in blankets and gave him little sips of hot water, then of hot milk and coffee, as I had seen a clever doctor in the hospital treat a similar case of nerve and heart depression. But the already weakened system could not recover from the awful shock of the exposure following the debauch, and on Sunday afternoon we saw that his heart was failing fast. All day the miners had been dropping in to inquire after him, for Billy had been a great favorite in other days, and the attention of the town had been admiringly centered upon his fight of these last weeks. It was with no ordinary sorrow that the news of his condition was received. As Mrs. Mavor sang to him his large, coarse hands moved in time to the music, but he did not open his eyes till he heard Mr. Craig's voice in the next room. Then he spoke his name, and Mr. Craig was kneeling beside him in a moment. The words came slowly:

"Oi tried—to fight hit hout—but—Oi got beaten. Hit 'urts to think 'e's ashamed o' me. Oi'd like t'a done better—Oi would."

"Ashamed of you, Billy!" said Craig in a voice that broke. "Not he."

"And—ye hall—elped me so!" he went on. "Oi wish Oi'd 'a done better—Oi do." And his eyes sought Geordie and then rested on Mrs. Mavor, who smiled back at him with a world of love in her eyes. "You hain't hashamed o' me—yore heyes saigh so," he said, looking at her.

"No Billy," she said and I wondered at her steady voice, "not a bit. Why, Billy, I am proud of you."

He gazed up at her with wonder and ineffable love in his little eyes, then lifted his hand slightly toward her. She knelt quickly and took it in both of hers, stroking it and kissing it.

"Oi haught I'a done better. O'm hawful sorry Oi went back on 'im. Hit was the lemonade. The boys didn't mean no 'arm, but hit started the 'ell hinside."

Geordie hurled out some bitter words. "Don't be 'ard on 'em, Geordie. They didn't mean no 'arm," he said, and his eyes kept waiting till Geordie said hurriedly:

"Na, na, lad! I'll juist leave them till the Almighty."

Then Mrs. Mavor sang softly, smoothing his hand, "Just as I Am," and Billy dozed quietly for half an hour.

When he awoke again, his eyes turned to Mr. Craig, and they were troubled and anxious.

"Oi tried 'ard. Oi wanted to win," he struggled to say.

By this time Craig was master of himself, and he answered in a clear, distinct voice:

"Listen, Billy. You made a great fight, and you are going to win yet. And, besides, do you remember the sheep that got lost over the mountains?" This parable was Billy's special delight. "He didn't beat it when he got it, did he? He took it in his arms and carried it home, and so he will you."

And Billy, keeping his eyes fastened on Mr. Craig, simply said:

"Will 'e?"

"Sure!" said Craig.

"Will 'e?" he repeated, turning his eyes upon Mrs. Mavor.

"Why, yes, Billy," she answered cheerily, though the tears were streaming from her eyes. "I would, and he loves you far more."

He looked at her, smiled and closed his eyes. I put my hand on his heart. It was fluttering feebly. Again a troubled look passed over his face.

"My—poor—hold—mother!" he whispered. "She's—hin—the—wukus."

"I shall take care of her, Billy," said Mrs. Mavor in a clear voice, and again Billy smiled. Then he turned his eyes to Mr. Craig and from him to Geordie and at last to Mrs. Mavor, where they rested. She bent over and kissed him twice on the forehead.

"Tell 'er," he said, with difficulty, "e's took me 'ome."

"Yes, Billy!" she cried, gazing into his glazing eyes.

He tried to lift her hand. She kissed him again. He drew one deep breath and lay quite still.

"Thank the blessed Saviour!" said Mr. Craig reverently. "He has taken him home."

But Mrs. Mavor held the dead hand tight and sobbed out passionately:

"Oh, Billy, Billy, you helped me once when I needed help! I cannot forget!"

And Geordie, groaning, "Aye, laddie, laddie!" passed out into the fading light of the early evening.

Next day no one went to work, for to all it seemed a sacred day. They carried him into the little church, and there Mr. Craig spoke of his long, hard fight and of his final victory, for he died without a fear and with love to the men who, not knowing, had been his death. And there was no bitterness in any heart, for Mr. Craig read the story of the sheep and told how gently he had taken Billy home; but, though no word was spoken, it was there the league was made again.

They laid him under the pines beside Lewis Mavor, and the miners threw sprigs of evergreen into the open grave. When Slavin, sobbing bitterly, troughed his sprig, no one stopped him though all thought it strange.

As we turned to leave the grave the light from the evening sun came softly through the gap in the mountain, and, filling the valley, touched the tree and the little mound beneath with glory, and I thought of that other glory, which is brighter than the sun and was not sorry that poor Billy's wearied fight was over, and I could not help agreeing with Craig that it was the league had its revenge.

CHAPTER X.

WHAT CAME TO SLAVIN.

BILLY BREEN'S legacy to the Black Rock mining camp was a new league, which was more than the old league remained. The league was new in its spirit and in its methods. The impression made upon the camp by Billy Breen's death was very remarkable, and I have never been quite able to account for it. The mood of the community at that time was peculiarly susceptible. Billy was one of the oldest of the old timers. His decline and fall had been a long process, and his struggle for life and manhood was striking enough to arrest the attention and awaken the sympathy of the whole camp. We instinctively side with a man in his struggle for freedom, for we feel the freedom is native to him and to us. The sudden collapse of the struggle stirred the men with a deep pity to the beaten man and a deep contempt for those who had tricked him to his doom; but, though the pity and the contempt remained, the gloom was relieved and the sense of defeat removed from the men's minds by the transforming glory of Billy's last hour. Mr. Craig, reading of the tragedy of Billy's death, transfigured defeat into victory, and this was gradually accepted by the men as the true reading, though to them it was full of mystery. But they could all understand and appreciate a full value the spirit that breathed through the words of the dying man. "Don't be 'ard on 'em. They didn't mean no 'arm." And this was the new spirit of the league.

It was this spirit that surprised Slavin into sudden tears at the grave side. He had come braced for curse and vengeance, for all knew it was he who had doctored Billy's lemonade and instead of vengeance the message from the dead that echoed through the voice of the living was one of pity and forgiveness.

But the days of the league's negative, defensive warfare were over. The fight was to the death, and now the war was to be carried into the enemy's country. The league men proposed a thoroughly equipped and well conducted coffee room, reading room and hall to parallel the enemy's line of operation and defeat them with their own weapons upon their own ground. The main outlines of the scheme were clearly defined and were easily seen, but the perfecting of the details called for all Craig's tact and good sense. When, for instance, Vernon Winton, who had charge of the entertainment department, came for Craig's opinion as to a minstrel troupe and private theatricals, Craig was prompt with his answer:

"Anything clean goes."

"A nigger show?" asked Winton.

"Depends upon the niggers," replied Craig, with a gravely comic look shrewdly adding, "Ask Mrs. Mavor. And so the League Minstrel and Dramatic company became an established fact and proved, as Craig afterwards told me, a great means of grace to the camp.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 53, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

REPORT OF EDUCATION BOARD.

dents, two academies for boys, with 175 students, and two seminaries for girls, with 100 students, with a total property valuation and endowment of $875,000, and student body of 970, showing an increase in every department of our work, and a gross increase of 860 students, an increase of eight-fold, and a gross increase in property of $800,000, an increase of eleven-fold.

If we turn our eyes for a moment to our friends of other denominations, we will see the situation more clearly. They are planning for more stringent college entrance requirements. We have them already. They are planning for a college for women. We have one already, and one the equal in grade with any in the land. They are planning or working to establish academies for boys. We have them already. They are trying to establish seminaries for girls. We have them already. They are trying to correlate their institutions. Ours are already correlated, and are working harmoniously together. They are calling for $250,000. We have already raised $800,000.

WHAT WE WANT.

But why refer to these things? In order that we may rejoice and rest contented? No! But to fill our hearts with courage and hope for the future just ahead. We want to raise $200,000, and some are doubtful and hesitating and wondering whether it can be done. We have raised $800,000 for education in the past fifteen years, and over $100,000 has been subscribed to the cause in the past three years, and that by less than one-tenth of our membership. We are able, abundantly able, to raise this money, and it can, it must be done. And this word must be the only word that will meet the case. The Board of Trustees has declared that it will give free tuition to all students as soon as the Church has raised $200,000 to meet the offer of Mr. Branch to give $100,000. If our college is to do the work we must have done, it must be able to offer free tuition, and this it must do, not only because we want our boys who are to be the leading men of the State trained under Methodist influence and imbued with Methodist principles, but for another reason, which is vital in its significance. There is no more serious problem before the Church to-day than how to obtain an adequate supply of properly trained men for her ministry. Our sister churches are feeling this difficulty more seriously than we are at present. The candidates for the ministry under the care of the various Church boards have fallen off within about eight years 68 per cent. in one, 58 per cent. in another, and 20 per cent. in a third. It has not been possible for the secretary to obtain any accurate figures among us, as we do not have such boards, but the practical question which confronts us as a Conference is, "How many properly trained men come into our ministry from any other source than Randolph-Macon College?"

DEPEND ON ONE COLLEGE.

"How many come to us from William and Mary, or from Blacksburg, or from the University of Virginia, or from any other college?" Few, indeed, almost none. If our Methodism is to hold its place as a great elevating power in the State, it must have trained men for its pulpits; these trained men must come from Randolph-Macon College. But there are not enough men who enter Randolph-Macon College as ministerial students to supply our needs. The college must itself be a nursery in the future as it has been in the past. The secretary knows from personal experience in his own case and from his knowledge of other men at college with him that many a man who has entered the college with no thought of the ministry has received and accepted his call to the ministry there. The college must attract men throughout the bounds of the Conference, and especially must it attract and secure those men who investigate carefully before deciding what college they will attend. The college must not only be able to show a faculty and facilities for training equal to any in the State, but it must try to do so at such cost as will allow parents and students to decide the question of attendance solely upon the ability of the institution to give the training desired.

This movement is vital, therefore, to the success of Methodism in our State. We must raise this money if we are to hold our own, to say nothing of any advance movement. Your secretary is persuaded that every member of this body believes that this money ought to be raised. But, brethren, have we yet realized that it must be raised? Will we go out from this Conference so convinced of the necessity of raising this money that we will become missionaries and stir our people, so that even the man who has no children of his own, the man who cannot send his own children to college, and especially the man whom God has blessed with more means than the average man, will realize that Randolph-Macon College is vitally connected with the life of Virginia Methodism, and that he must be personally interested in this matter if he expects his Church to continue to be one of God's instruments in this State. We must give free tuition at the college. We must raise this money to do so.

SOME PERTINENT FIGURES.

Directly connected with this subject some other figures are pertinent. In 1885 the assessment on the Conference for domestic missions was $9,050; for superannuated preachers, widows, and orphans, $10,000; for Bishops, $1,800; for Church extension, $4,750; for Randolph-Macon College, $3,500. This year the assessment for domestic missions is $14,500; for superannuates, $15,000; for Bishops, $3,860; for Church extension, $8,200; for Randolph-Macon College only $3,500. The assessments and contributions for all these objects have increased from 50 to 100 per cent., but the assessment for Randolph-Macon has remained the same. Nor is it a sufficient reply to point to the special gifts which have been made to the college during this time. These gifts are from a comparatively small number of persons, while the assessment is laid upon the body of the Church. In 1885 the membership of the Church, including our North Carolina territory, was 64, 064. In 1901 the membership, without North Carolina territory, was 91,654, an increase of nearly 45 per cent. Is it too much to ask that the Conference show the same spirit toward Randolph-Macon College that it does toward the other great causes of the Church? Is it too much to ask that if 64,000 Methodists in 1885 were asked for $3,500 for Randolph-Macon College that in 1902 91,654 Methodists should be asked for $5,000 for the same great cause? In 1885 the Church was asked for 5½ cents per member for Randolph-Macon College. In 1901 the Church was asked for only 3 8-10 cents per member. Surely we have not realized the situation. Your secretary frankly confesses that he is astonished at the result of this simple comparison of figures. And now, having the facts before us, we must act. We must increase our assessment. The college has a right to share in the result of our growth, a growth which her sons in the ministry have been so largely instrumental in producing. Not to increase the assessment is to go backward, while all other agencies, Church and State, are pressing forward. Your secretary does not believe that this Conference, in view of its past record, can or will take but one course. It will surely show to the Church its estimate of the importance of this great cause by calling for an advance which will be proportionate to our increase in membership and to our contributions to other causes. The resolutions to be presented by the Board of Education will put in concrete form the action which it thinks wise to recommend to the Conference.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES CANNON, JR.,

Conference Secretary of Education.

BOARD OF EDUCATION. REPORT
NO. 2.

The Secretary of the Board of Education is instructed by the Board to present the following resolutions. The first two resolutions simply present the action of the Board as to two of its honored members, in order that the Conference may be informed of its action, and that the action may be made a part of the report of the Board:

Whereas the Board has lost an honored and most valuable member in the death of Captain Richard Irby, who has served the Church faithfully all his life and this Board ever since its organization; therefore

Resolved, That while we deplore our loss, yet we rejoice in his long and useful life and his peaceful entrance into the life above.

Resolved, second, That we spread this tribute upon our minutes and send a copy to Captain Irby's family.

R. FERGUSON,

JAMES CANNON, JR.

Resolved, 1, That the Board of Education regrets to lose Dr. A. Coke Smith as president of the Board, but rejoices in the fact that the Church has recognized his exceptional talents by electing him to the office of Bishop of our Church. We hereby assure Bishop Smith of our continued good wishes and prayers for his usefulness in the wider field to which he has been called.

Resolved, 2, That this resolution be spread upon our minutes and a copy be sent to Bishop Smith.

JAMES CANNON, JR.,

W. J. YOUNG.

The following resolutions are presented to the Conference for adoption:

Whereas the Bowling Green Seminary has been organized in accordance with a resolution under a charter of the Rappahannock District Conference in accord with the educational policy of the Church, and is being conducted in harmony with our ethical standards,

Resolved, 1, That we commend this institution to the patronage and liberality of our people.

Resolved, 2, That we cordially commend the Suffolk College for Young Ladies to the patronage of our people.

Resolved, 3, That we have heard with great interest of the work of Rev. J. M. Burton, as agent of Charlottesville District Female Seminary, and are glad to learn of the bright prospects for the erection of a suitable seminary for the girls of that section of our work. We realize a necessity of his continuance in this work, and commend this cause to the continued support and liberality of our people.

Resolved, 4, That we recommend to our preachers to take advantage of the Correspondence School of our Church, organized by action of our General Conference, and we recommend the acceptance of the certificate of this school in lieu of examination of the regular committee.

Resolved, 5, That we nominate Rev. James Cannon, Jr., to be Conference Secretary and Treasurer of Education, to be elected by the Conference for a term of four years, in accordance with the constitution of the Board of Education.

Resolved, 6, That the Presiding Bishop be, and is hereby, requested to appoint Rev. W. E. Edwards, D. D., as Professor of Moral Philosophy and the English Bible in Randolph-Macon College; Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, D. D., as Secretary and Treasurer of Randolph-Macon College; Rev. James Cannon, Jr., as Principal of Blackstone Female Institute; Rev. E. H. Rowe, as Principal of the Southern Seminary; Rev. J. M. Burton, as Financial Agent of the Charlottesville District Female Institute.

Resolved, 7, That the Joint Board of Finance be requested to apportion to the several districts $5,000 for the benefit of Randolph-Macon College, $991 for the benefit of the General Board of Education, $250 for Paine and Lane Institute, the whole sum to be pro rated

CONFERENCE SERMON.

Delivered on Wednesday evening, November 13th, before the Conference at Broad Street church, Richmond, by Rev. S. C. Hatcher, pastor of Market Street church, Petersburg:

I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved. And the Lord answered me, and said, Write the vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it.—Hab. 2: 1, 2.

The tribe and parentage of Habakkuk are wrapt in obscurity, and there is very little history to recite concerning him, beyond what may be inferred from incidental notices in the Bible. He was probably a Levite, and the Rabins identify him as the son of the Shunamite, whom Elisha restored.

It is not necessary for God's great to have biographies; they live in what they have done for the world. These three chapters are a moment more lasting than adamant rock, and more beautiful than polished marble.

There are prophets that wrote at greater length, but none put more soul in their prophecy. Umbreit said of him that "he combined the softness of Jeremiah with the loftiness of Aaph." Taylor: "He is unequalled in majesty and splendor of language." Daniel Webster: "His imagery is not surpassed in all literature." Some of the most frequently quoted passages of the Bible were written by him, and St. Paul uses his great truth, "The just shall live by faith," as the conservative doctrine of two of his epistles.

He lived in troublesome times; violence, wrong and injustice were everywhere. The spirit of selfishness had permeated the life of his people, and for their many sins a great enemy was to invade their land. He saw the remnant of the just in affliction, and he wondered why.

Doubts and perplexities were in his soul as to the ways of God with man. He could unroll the scroll of the law, and there read an explanation of God's providence, but his soul burned for a special message for his age. His people looked to him for an answer, and he must have it fresh from the lips of God. He was, indeed, a prophet, but his attitude was not characteristic of his predecessors. They addressed the nation Israel on behalf of God, and he speaks to God on behalf of Israel. Their task was to give a revelation, he accepts the revelation already given, but sets himself to the task of getting special light, to apply it to the lives of his people. He went from their midst up to the mount of God, bearing their discouragements, failures and sins, received a message of explanation, comfort and hope, come back to them again as the leader and prophet of his age. In these respects he is an ideal for those who preach to-day.

1. The preacher must be a leader and prophet for his age.—"Does the pulpit lead or is it led?" is a subject that has been recently discussed from the East to the West, and the conclusions reached was the conformity is a characteristic of our times; the pulpit sometimes leads, but it is oftener led. If this conclusion is true, then it is high time that every man who feels it should pour out his soul to the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, to set men over his congregations, "which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in, that the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd."

Wherever the leader is wanting in the pulpit there is a dearth of boldness, vigor, aggressiveness and initiative. Men admire a leader; men despise a sycophant. My dear brethren, every true minister feels that it is an abandonment of his high office to allow himself to conform to prevalent views, and be swayed by popular ideals, which are contrary to his convictions, simply to gain popularity—he is to mould public opinion, and revolutionize unholy customs—he is not to conform to the world idea, but transform the world to the Christ idea.

The world has a right also to look to the pulpit for an answer for the problems of this age—a magnificent age—the best the world has ever seen, but full of tendencies that must be stopped, ideals that must be obliterated, and relations that must be adjusted. These grave questions tax the greatest brains and discourage the most enthusiastic. Ever and anon some new prophet of the age enters the role with an answer that does not solve the problems or satisfy the people. O, the miserable failures of these world prophets; they are as helpless as the priest of Baal. They "go down to Egypt for help, and stay on horses, and trust in chariots because they are many, and in horsemen because they are very strong, but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, from whom cometh all our help.

Now that the preacher may fulfill the functions of his office as a leader and prophet—

2. He must have a special vision from God for his age.—The ability to lead and teach is not inherent in the office of the preacher, nor does his paraphernalia entitle him to be credited with it. The imposition of holy hands, when placed at the dictates of the Holy Spirit upon a holy life, may be a blessing; but holy hands on an unconsecrated head are a farce and mockery.

Nor is he sufficient for his great work when he knows the law of logic, the arts of rhetoric, and from memory the written word of God. The doctors in the days of Jesus knew the letter, but they were merely reciters, not prophets of their age, for Jesus, of whom the prophets wrote, stood in their midst, and they knew Him not. The Holy Spirit must interpret the word, if it is a lamp to the preachers feet and a light to his pathway.

We find in the study of comparative religions that each had at its origin a definite, however limited, revelation. The idea of one all-powerful, wise and good God is found at the beginning of each faith that can be traced back far enough. The reason, doubtless, for the decline from the higher and purer form was that though their priests had a revelation, they had no vision on it to enable them to lift it into the lives of their disciples. St. Paul's declaration concerning the old dispensation was also true to their case, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

The Bible is the book for all ages, but the Holy Spirit must enlighten the preacher for its application. Peter had to have a vision before he was ready to preach to Cornelius and the Gentiles, salvation through faith in Christ. He was a narrow, bigoted Jew, and left to himself he would never have seen it his duty to have done so. He knew the Bible, and could preach its doctrines. He knew Jesus, and could have written a history of His life. But I want you to mark it, that it was not out of the Bible as he read it, or from Jesus as he knew Him, but by a special revelation that he was qualified to proclaim a universal salvation.

St. Paul had planned to be a preacher to Asia, and to visit Bithynia, but the Holy Spirit led him to Troas, and there a vision appeared unto him. In the night a man of Macedonia, praying him, "Come over and help us," and that Macedonian man just frustrated all his plans, and gave him an appointment that he had not thought of. From this world's point of view, the Bishop that read his appointment that night sent him to the hardest place that could be found. If he had been disposed to complain, he could have said that favoritism had been shown, for men were left in Asia that did not have half the ability that he had, while he, with delicate body, was sent into the roughest territory, to live among uncongenial people on half rations. If, on the other hand, he were here to-night I think he would tell us that he will never stop praising God for disappointing him that night in his appointment.

And from that day to this, God's cause in the world has been represented by men and women to whom He grants visions and reveals truths. He came in mighty vision to Fox and his friends, proclaiming that it was of enough to be bred at Oxford and Cambridge to qualify men to be ministers of Christ, but there must be the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The privilege of direct access to God without intervention of priest or rite was revealed to him, and its proclamation wrought a mighty revival of primitive religion.

He came to pious Zinzendorf writing letters to Christ as a child and declaring that he had but one passion: "It is He, He only," and revealed that not in the judiciary at Dresden, but in the humble ministrations at Berthelsdorf, he is to satisfy the passion and give to the world another example of the service. Obedient to this heavenly vision he infuses a spirit in that humble colony of Moravians that falls as a priceless mantle on Wesley, and gave birth to the religious movement of the eighteenth century, known as Methodism.

To Luther was given the vision of a corrupt church, and his duty to expose its nefarious practices. John Wesley was given the vision of the valley of dry bones of the eighteenth century. The Church had culture, form and material wealth, but little life and no power. He saw the heinousness of sin and the necessity for regeneration. His environments, tastes and predilections were with the established Church,

Natural inclinations would have held him in the pulpit and among the polite, but the vision in his soul carried him to Moorfields and Kennington Commons. Isaac Taylor says that "this field preaching" (to which Wesley was averse), "was the event whence the religious epoch now current must date its commencement." Thank God, the father of our denomination was obedient to his vision.

Seldom does a generation pass but some seers are sent to make the Word of God a living influence on their age. Before them traditions crumble, doubts retreat and mighty moral and scriptural revolutions are accomplished.

There is a tendency in this day to lower the sacred calling. It is heard everywhere that a preacher is nothing more than a man, and his work is classed with the professions. The ministry, in its desire to put itself in touch with men, is partially responsible for this error. The preacher ought to be among men affable, approachable and practical, but if he is a minister of Christ, he is more than a man—he is a man called of God, commissioned for a peculiar work and endued with power from on high to do it. He leaves the ordinary walks of life, discarding their proffers of pleasures and preferment, to be the messenger of heaven.

If the divine voice is not heard in his preaching it were better that he were silent. If Christ is not seen in his life, men will not learn of Jesus from him. It has been well said that "No man is ready to stand before his people, whether it be for the first or the thousandth time, till he has had some vision of heavenly truth, and heard the voice of God in his soul," implying the complete surrender of the preacher's self to the guidance of the Holy Ghost.

We are not sufficient for our ministry, our sufficiency is alone of God, and we must expect him to guide us in the selection of the texts we use for our sermons, in adapting our discussions to the needs of our people. We must look to him for an answer to the queries that go up from anxious hearts, bewildering in the intricate maze of providence, for a sweet message of comfort to those who sit in the ashes of grief and disappointment, a cheering message of hope to those who inquire of the night, telling sad hearts that the morning cometh; all the East is purple with the glory of the eternal sun.

At the siege of Lucknow, when the English garrison was cut off from supplies, and in danger of massacre at the hands of the Sepoys, every eye and every ear was strained to catch the first sign of Havelocks' army coming to their relief. A Scotch girl, putting her ear close to the ground, caught the far-away strain of music, and, springing up, shouted: "Dinna ye hear ye the slogan?" sending a thrill of hope to every heart. She was the first to hear because she had put herself in the attitude to receive.

This leads us to consider in the next place—

3. The attitude to receive these visions of God.

LESSON IX, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 30.

Text of the Lesson, Judg. vii, 1-8, 16-21—Memory Verses, 19-21—Golden Text, Ps. cxviii, 8—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

1, 2. And the Lord said unto Gideon, The people that are with thee are many for me to give the Midianites. So their hands lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me.

Gideon, the son of Joash the Abiezrite, was one of those whom God raised up to deliver Israel from her oppressors. The story is found in chapter vi, 11-16, where we learn his own estimate of himself and see his strength in these words from the Lord: "Go in this thy might. Have not I sent thee? Surely I will be with thee." Then in chapter vi, 34, we read in the revised version margin that the Spirit clothed Himself with Gideon, so that whatever was done was by the Spirit through Gideon. The Lord alone must be exalted, and no flesh may glory in His presence (Isa. ii, 11, 17; xlii, 8; xlviii, 11; I Cor. i, 29, 31; Jer. ix, 23, 24).

3. Whosoever is fearful and afraid let him return.

By this proclamation the Lord would test and sift Gideon's army of 32,000 men, and it must have been greatly to Gideon's amazement when 22,000 cowards returned home. Can it be possible that among the professed followers of Christ today two-thirds or more are cowards, afraid to confess Him before the world, afraid to acknowledge their firm faith in His promises, afraid to follow Him fully, afraid of the cost of being whole hearted disciples, afraid of the call to go forth in His name to some distant land with the glad tidings of His salvation? It is greatly to be feared that it is even so.

4-7. And the Lord said unto Gideon, The people are yet too many. Bring them down unto the water, and I will try them for thee there.

From this test only 300 of the remaining 10,000 came forth as qualified in the sight of the Lord. What a sifting! It is the Lord's own searching of hearts, and He finds but 300 out of 32,000 whom He can use. It is not a tenth and scarcely a hundredth part that the Lord gets as His own. The first test took out the fearful, the people who were afraid. But who are these 9,700 who are asked to return home? They are not afraid. What is their trouble? They bowed down upon their knees to drink, while the 300 lapped of the water as a dog lappeth. Just a little self indulgence, a little of their own pleasure rather than zeal in His service. What a very little thing! And yet it was their test. It decided whether they should go or stay. He is ever testing us in the little, ordinary things of our daily life, and we are not apt to think of it.

8, 16. And he divided the 300 men into three companies, and he put a trumpet in every man's hand, with empty pitchers and lamps within the pitchers.

As to the rest it is written in verse 7 that he let them all go, "every man unto his place." The fearful went to their place of safety and the self indulgent to their ease. But the 300, with food, trumpets and torches, are ready for service. As we go against the enemy day by day we must be strong, our testimony must be clear and our light brightly shining, for the trumpet suggests testimony and the lamp or torch (margin) = light. It is necessary that the leader be a man of great courage, calm, confident, fearless. In addition to all that the Lord had said to Gideon and had shown him He further encourages him by causing him to hear some things that their enemies are saying among themselves (verses 9-15). It is not safe or wise to listen to what others say of you unless you have as clear guidance to do so as Gideon had.

17. And he said unto them, Look on me and do likewise, and behold, when I come to the outside of the camp, it shall be that as I do so shall ye do.

So also said Abimelech in chapter ix, 48, "What ye have seen me do make haste and do as I have done." Our leader whom we follow is the Lord of Hosts, the Son of God, the Great Head of the Church, the King of Israel, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, and it is written of Him, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged" (Isa. xlii, 4). We are to follow Him, to walk as He walked, to run with patience, looking unto Jesus, to see no man save Jesus only and to let His mind be in us, humble, self emptied, seeking only the glory of God (Matt. xvi, 24; I John ii, 6; Heb. xii, 1, 2; Mark ix, 8; Phil. ii, 5-8).

18-21. And the three companies blew the trumpets and brake the pitchers and held the lamps in their left hands and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withal, and they cried, The sword of the Lord and of Gideon.

The result was that the Lord set every man's sword against his fellow throughout all the host of the enemy, and the Lord wrought a great victory for Israel. As the redeemed of the Lord we are in the world, but not of it. We are not to be in any way conformed to it, for the whole world lieth in the wicked one (John xvii, 14, 16; Rom. xii, 1, 2; I John v, 19, R. V.); but we are to be overcomers by the blood of the Lamb and the word of our testimony and by faith in our Captain, manifesting His life in these mortal bodies to the glory of God the Father (Rev. xii, 11; I John v, 4; II Cor. iv, 11; Phil. ii, 11). When in fellowship with the world and overcome by it, we are, like Israel by the Midianites, oppressed and enslaved; but when by a consistent life and a clear, ringing testimony to the blood of the Lamb (torch and trumpet) we honor God we are then like Gideon's 300. Remember it is the Lord and Gideon, the Lord being always pre-eminent.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 30, "A Cure For the World's Woe"—Text, Isa. xlv, 12-23.

"Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God, and there is none else."

This message was first spoken for the encouragement of a people who had seen their land invaded and devastated, their cities captured and destroyed, their temple and all their ancient sanctuaries of religion defiled or burned, their armies defeated, multitudes slain, themselves driven captive to a faroff land and many made slaves. Desolation of all they held dear and sacred and discouragement of heart was complete. Their case seemed hopeless. Their land was one wide desolation scarcely habitable even for a miserable remnant of people, exposed to constant dangers. Their ancient religion was dishonored. On every side they saw temples and continual service of idols. Immense wealth, luxury and the refinement of a civilization ages old were conspicuous in their Babylonian home.

They were but one among many people whom the rapacity of their conquerors had ruined and then transported to enrich the lands near their capital. No other people had ever recovered their land, their nationality, prosperity and religion. Others adopted the worship and customs of the new country and gradually became absorbed into the great body of its population, losing all distinctive life.

What better fate than this could be hoped for by the people of Judah? Their only hope lay in the character of their duty and the views of truth which some of their prophets persistently proclaimed.

This lesson is taken from the midst of a passage unlike almost anything else in the whole range of literature. From chapter xi to lv of Isaiah is the sublimest message of encouragement ever spoken to any people. It seems to have come to the people of Judah in the darkest hour of their captivity, when their trust in the God of their fathers was ready to give way and they seemed about to abandon all their past and lose themselves in the mass of the worshippers around them. Then the great prophet speaks in trumpet tones the message from Jehovah, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people!" There is no quivering in his strong notes. Jehovah is the only God. He rules the heavens and earth. Kings are His servants. Babylon shall soon be punished for her great wickedness and destroyed forever. Watch the rising power of Media. Cyrus is a messiah from Jehovah. Jerusalem shall be rebuilt. Israel shall be once more planted in her own land. Idols are vain, and all who trust in them shall be put to shame. Trust in Jehovah, for He alone rules.

This prophet gets a view of Jehovah's purpose none before him had seen. The heathen are no more objects of wrath, merely to be destroyed. There is hope for them also. Israel has been humbled and has learned the lesson prosperity could not teach her, that Jehovah alone can save. She shall now learn her true calling as servant of Jehovah to instruct and lead the people to Him who alone can cure them.

The Degree of Blameworthiness.

The shades of niceties of blameworthiness are infinite even to our dull perceptions. There will be no rough and ready measurements by the wise and patient Christ. It is a joy to remember that it is recorded of Him, He needed not that any should bear witness of man, for He knew what was in man. Under His wise administration every one will be judged according to his capabilities, motives and deeds. We shall reap what we have sown. Measure for measure will be the rule. Procrustes reduced all that fell into his hands to one standard. Draco visited nearly every breach of law with great severity, but the Christ, so happily constituted, will be guilty of no such foolishness. He will judge righteous judgment.—Rev. W. T. Acomb of Maidstone, England.

A Good Day's Work.

This is the way to do a good day's work: Begin it with God; do all in the name of the Lord Jesus and for the glory of God; count nothing common or unclean in itself—it can be so only when the motive of your life is low. Be not content with eye service, but, as servants of God, do everything from the heart and for His "Well done." Ask Him to kindle and maintain in your heart the loftiest motives, and be as men who watch for the coming of the master of the house.—F. B. Meyer.

The Harvest of Action.

Nothing with God can be accidental. Every sequence, sweet or bitter, is the harvest of sown action. God has no favorites who can hold fire in the hand and escape pain or sorrow and till without treasure. Heaven here or yonder is the place of ends, the harvest home with its garnered sheaves, accomplished triumph, transport of self completion.—Clarence Lathbury.

A Universal Sin.

Unbelief is the most universal of all sins. It is wider than infidelity and more subtle than atheism. Indifference alone can express it. Where one exists the other is sure to be.—Presbyterian Journal.

The Greatest Problem.

There are great problems ahead of us as a nation, but the really greatest problem is the problem of making better men and better women of all of us.—President Roosevelt at Dover, N. H.

The Master's Work.

The Master's work may make weary feet, but it leaves the spirit glad.—Episcopal Recorder.

Character and Destiny.

Eternity is your destiny, and your character depends upon your destiny.—Rev. T. B. Roth, Lutheran, Greenville, Pa.

Usefulness Beyond Death.

No man's life is really a success if its usefulness ends when he dies.—Rev. William Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco.

Question of Good Government.

No question which involves good government should be without interest to the Christian.—Rev. L. A. Crandall, Baptist, Chicago.

Man's Supreme Need.

What man needs supremely is freedom to develop himself to live for the worthiest ends.—Rev. Dr. Raymond, Schenectady, N. Y.

The Mission of Poverty.

Sometimes to have been born poor and to have to struggle with difficulties make you the better man.—Rev. Dr. Hyde, Episcopalian, Brooklyn.

Worth More Than Wealth.

God's blessing on a man's honest life will be worth more than the whole world's wealth.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

History Moves Onward.

History never moves backward, and the time is coming when man shall have dominion over all creation.—Rev. Dr. J. H. Henry, Presbyterian, Pittsburgh.

Present Responsibility.

If we are not Christians in the enlightenment of today, God will hold us responsible according to our light. If we are not forgiven, we are not Christians.—Rev. J. T. Stone, Presbyterian, Baltimore.

Sentiment and Commercialism.

Jesus justified sentiment as opposed to commercialism. He taught that the poor are sometimes more than mouths to be fed; that hunger of the heart is real.—Rev. T. J. Villers, Baptist, Indianapolis.

Christian Life Not Austere.

Christian life is not narrow and austere, holding the threat of hell over our harmless enjoyments. It shuts out only that which is wrong or doubtful.—Rev. Pearse Pinch, Congregationalist, Chicago.

The First Impulse.

The first impulse of one who has found the new life is to run to share it with one whom he knows to be groping in unrest. So Christianity spreads.—Rev. E. C. Moore, Congregationalist, Providence, R. I.

The Invisible Foundations.

Our responsibility and our character rest upon invisible foundations of thought. Thought has moral force. We have control of it, else it were not for moral value in our lives.—Rev. Dr. Alonzo Monk, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Sneering at Sentiment.

How foolishly we sneer at what we are pleased to call a sentiment! A sentiment, subtle and delicate as the perfume of flowers afield, is sometimes a voice of God in the soul of man.—Rev. F. T. Bayley, Congregationalist, Denver.

Growth of Spiritual Life.

One quaint old English writer declares that the Christian grows tall by stooping; that the heaviest wheat is not found upon the most upright stalks, and so the growth in the divine life is not marked by imposing greatness.—Rev. George R. Taylor, Unitarian, St. Bethlehem, Tenn.

Vanity of Human Greatness.

How little after all is human greatness! We sum it up in these terrible words which embody all the wisdom of Solomon, "Vanitas vanitatum!" Aye, it is not so much achievement after all that counts with God as character.—Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Need of the Church.

Not money, but men, is what the church needs most of all; men and women who will rise up to a personal, intelligent interest, which gives what money cannot buy. To reach human lives and touch human souls can only be done by personal interest.—Rev. L. M. Zimmerman, Lutheran, Baltimore.

Not Dependent Upon Learning.

There are some people who think that when a man has faith he must give up his reason. This is a very superstitious and ignorant view to take of these things. No man can give up his reason or his conscience. But God did not make religion dependent upon learning or upon knowledge, but upon love and faith.—Rev. Dr. J. D. Stafford, Catholic, Washington.

Mission of the Church.

The idea that the community should serve the church will not hold in this practical age. Instead of asking the community to serve the church the church must find means for serving the community. Religion consists not in creed alone, but in life. Religion has passed from the monastery and the battle of the schools to the political arena and the market place.—Rev. James D. Rankin, Presbyterian, Denver.

Responsibilities of Possession.

With possession comes responsibility. Ability and responsibility are inseparable neighbors. Our rich men give largely in the aggregate, but meanly in proportion to their wealth. The poor make sacrifices to give to the church. There is nothing of sacrifice in the gifts of the rich. They forget their wealth is God's and that they are but the stewards of his bounty. When they give in proportion to their wealth as the poor give in proportion to their possessions, every treasury of the Lord will be full, and all over the world there will be somewhat of a foretaste of heaven in the palaces of the rich and the hovels of the poor.—Rev. Dr. MacArthur, Baptist, New York.

The Democratic Convention of the Eleventh District of Kentucky unanimously nominated J. P. Harrison, of Wynn county, for Congress, and instructed him, if elected, to work for the passage of a bill prohibiting the issuing of licenses in any community for the sale of whiskey where there is local option prohibition.

Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REQUEST FROM DR. FITT.

Dr. R. H. Pitt, one of the editors of the Religious Herald, has written to the editor of the Recorder, requesting the publication of the following communication sent by him to the Richmond Times. The Recorder stands for justice to all, and so prints the communication without hesitation or further comment:

THE HERALD WAS NOT PAID.

Editor The Times:

Sir,—I have been out of the city for several days, and have not seen the Richmond papers until this morning. I find in your issue of the 19th a very graphic account of the proceedings of the Virginia Conference for the day before. In the course of the discussion, Rev. Mr. Hope is represented as saying:

"He has been aware of the complaint that the Advocate had not met all expectations, and that other religious papers were held up and contrasted with it. But these religious papers are paid for the space they give. This applies particularly to a religious paper of Richmond, which has recently been giving great attention to a movement for the college here. 'The college poured money into the treasury of the paper for the work it did,' he said. 'When a number of the copies of that paper went to the General Association last week the paper was paid for the extra expense.'"

Of course, I have no notion of interfering in the family affairs of our Methodist brethren, nor any disposition to trouble the public with our own, but this allusion to the Religious Herald is so inaccurate and misleading that I feel impelled to correct it. The Herald did not charge Richmond College one cent for the space they used, and they had full liberty to use as much as they wished whenever they wished. Four extra issues were published, of twenty pages each, in order to make room for the college editorials and contributions. The college defrayed the actual extra expense of paper, composition and press work involved in the four extra pages of these issues, and this, amounting in all to something over $100, was every cent received from them. As for the statement about the General Association number, it is utterly erroneous. I may in the circumstances, without impropriety, add that the editors not only gave their space without stint, but gave also out of their slender means to the movement an amount nearly ten times as large as the amount received for actual extra expense incurred.

R. H. PITT.

CONFERENCE SERMON.

because he looked and listened. "I will stand upon my watch, and will watch to see what he will say unto me." Mr. Ruskin has said: "Hundreds of people can talk for one that can think, but thousands can think for one that can see." I cannot assent to the statement of this high authority, unless you allow me to amend it by substituting the word do for can; because a higher than he has said: "Having eyes, ye see not," implying the ability, but failure to use it. The soul has an eye to see the unseen, and an ear to hear the unheard, and if we look and listen God will speak to us.

The great financier opens both his eyes and studies the market; he sees the causes of depression and inflation, and moves over other men's plans to crown his own with success, not because of superior ability, but because he focalizes and used what he had. The great inventor sees in what to others is a common sight, the steam engine or the electric dynamo. The great poet looks down into the secret chambers of the heart and give expressions to sublime sentiments that were the useless heritage of millions. Who can estimate the worth of these men to the world? Do not attribute their success entirely to genius. The vigils of nights and days were theirs before the vision came.

In the days of Eli we read there was no open vision; God was silent, for men would not hear him; God was invisible, for earth blinded eyes could not see Him; but when Samuel came he found one to whom he could speak. Marconi has demonstrated the possibility of speaking to ships at sea, but he never attempts to do so unless the instrument on that ship is adjusted to receive the message, and the sailor there is listening and looking for it. God has demonstrated His power to speak to His children here in the world, and He always does so when we watch and listen for Him.

Henry the IV. once asked the Duke of Alva if he had observed the recent eclipse of the sun. "No," said the Duke, "I have so much to do on earth that I have no time to look up to heaven." This is the mistake of many busy lives, and accounts for their failure. Dr. McNeil says: "Every bush is a burning bush to the man that looks for God in it."

(2) We notice further that the prophet elevated himself to hear. "I will set me upon the tower."

It is often necessary to get up above the heads of the crowd, above the crush and clamor of the worldly throng, to where there is clearer air, the greater peace, and broader horizon. The tower was built that the watchman might go up above the heads of his loved ones and look off into the distance, and observe and report back the good news to cheer their hearts, or approaching evil that they might be armed to meet it.

The duties of the pastorate are such that the preacher often feels that he has little time for communion, and the people may grow clamorous for his presence, but he must retire to the watch tower of his soul—a place of private meditation—where in seclusion and elevation, undisturbed by men, he may commune with God.

In that busy ministry of Jesus multitudes tracked Him wherever He went, and it was with difficulty that He could be alone, but we find Him slipping away from them at eventide, and spending whole nights in communion and prayer. There was a long season of communion before the sermon of Pentecost. A critic has recently said that the sermons of Whitfield, that stirred thousands to repentance, from a literary point of view are hardly readable. Whence, then, their marvellous power? The man that preached those sermons often spent whole nights in prayer to God.

The late Geo. W. Carter, of our Conference, is reported to have told the following of himself: When a boy soon after he was licensed, he returned to his home, and was invited to preach. He prepared his sermon with great care, and committed it so thoroughly that he could start at the last paragraph and go backward to the text; he submitted it to a critic, and it was faultless. Being his home, he was anxious to do his best, and he felt quite sure that he could make an impression. Upon the appointed day, all the neighbors, far and near, were there to hear this talented young orator, and all the colored people turned out to hear "Young Marse George" preach. At the proper time he arose and began to speak, but in a few minutes his fine spun sentences began to tangle, and he sat down in confusion, burying his face in his hands. He had utterly failed, and his disappointment was almost unbearable. A death-like silence pervaded the room for a few minutes which was broken by an old white haired negro of saintly life, singing "You must walk with the Lord; you must talk with the Lord." He sang it through.—That saintly old negro, sitting in the gallery praying for his young master, saw the cause of his failure, and taught him the secret of successful preaching—walking with God, and talking with God.

And now, in conclusion —

1. Is it the preacher's privilege to have a vision that he can personally appropriate?

He must have it to strengthen his faith. Habakkuk wanted to answer the people; but before he could quiet the questionings of other hearts, his own must be at rest.

"What will he say to me?"

He has been called the skeptical prophet, but most of us come to doubting castle. When we begin to really feel and think, we begin to question, and it is not a sign of weakness. The greatest of all prophets asked, "Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?"

The sainted Dr. Jeter once said "he had at one time or another doubted everything except the depravity of his own heart." These doubting periods are fraught with tragedy. Some make entire shipwreck of faith. Seven years ago one of the most promising young men who purposed to join this body came to doubting castle and turned back. Many go round it. There are men to-day that are dumb on some doctrines of God's Word, because their own faith has not appropriated them; but there are many more, I rejoice to know who, like Habakkuk, have questioned and gone up into the tower, and received the vision that made all plain. These are our trusty, strong leaders, stronger because of the storms that have shaken them.

Then we need these visions for encouragement. Often in sweet seasons of communion we feel "Master, it is good to be High on the mountain here with Thee."

But our Lord takes us to the mount that we may go back to the valley and be helpful to the poor and helpless around us. In our enthusiastic moments we feel that though all men forsake Him, we never will, but all our moments are not transfigured, and all our moods are not enthusiastic. Every true minister of Jesus Christ has discouragements and trials. After his best efforts he finds a juniper tree, and feels like giving up. There ought not to be one word of censure for Peter for his proposing to go back to fishing again. There was a mighty battle in his breast before he did. All his high ideals were shattered. He had dreamed of a brilliant career for himself, and his Lord. He did not want to fish for a living again, but there was nothing else to do but to return to his nets. The author of Hebrews tells us that Moses endured "as seeing the invisible."

Too many would have been his trials without this vision of his Lord always with him. All the waves and billows passed over his soul. He knew remorse, ingratitude, treachery and hardships of every kind.

There is a tower now in the ruins of Pekin, called the Look-Toward-Home Tower. It was built nearly a hundred years ago, by the emperor for a favorite girl of his household. She pined for her home and her mother, and he had this tower built where she could look out toward her home, while from the lower rooms there ascended strains of music that were familiar to her there. Thank God, when we are lonely and disappointed and sick hearted we can sit in the watch tower of our souls and look away from this world of care and sorrow to the sinless, tearless, glorious city, and listen while the sweet home sounds rise above the discord—

Sweet strains of a mansion in that beautiful city,

And a crown incorruptible for the warfare of life.

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presby-
terian Church, Chicago

Chicago. There are a scent of the pines and an atmosphere of the country in this sermon by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage from the text Mark vi. 31, "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile."

A desert place! What does that mean? Is Christ bidding his disciples follow him over a great sea of sand? Does he want his companions to lose themselves among the endless dunes and live where neither beast nor bird nor fish nor insect can live? Does he desire them to be terror-stricken at the moanings of the simooms or to be smothered in one of those awful desert windstorms and be there as completely lost as the merciless ocean can swallow down a shipwrecked crew and leave no trace where the watery jaws have opened and shut? No. Christ is not here alluding to a Mesopotamian or a Persian or a Sahara desert of sand. Christ is practically saying to his disciples, who are physically and mentally worn out from too much work: "Come, let us go out into the country where we can be alone. Let us go among the hills where we shall be separated from these throngs of people who are continually following us to be physically healed and spiritually fed. Let us go off alone, where we shall hear only the rustling of the leaves and the singing of the birds and the rippling of the brooks. Let us hie away into nature's haunts, where we can see the deer playing in the valleys and where we can stumble through the wild vines growing at our feet. Let us go away to the place where the shepherd leads his flocks among the fresh green pasture lands."

Every human body needs the recuperation of physical rest. When Daniel Webster made his last visit to John Adams, the aged ex-president said: "I am as well as any man of nearly ninety years could expect to be. I find I am afflicted with an incurable disease called old age. My spirit is occupying a very shaky tenement, and, as far as I can make out, sir, the Landlord does not intend to make any more repairs." That statement of John Adams was figuratively right and yet literally wrong. The human body, which was once created out of dust, is being recreated up to the very brink of the grave. We eat and drink and rest in order to give nourishment and strength to the bones, the muscles and the flesh. And rest is just as essential for the physical recreation as are food and water and light.

Why a Rest Is Needed.

The purpose of this sermon is to show that every hardworking Christian, at least once a year, should go out into the country and take a vacation, a prayerful rest, the same as Jesus' disciples, who left their work to take a rest. It is every Christian's duty at least once a year to leave the home, the store, the factory and have a complete change of scene and food. When Phoebe Cary came to die, looking up at her physician, she said: "Doctor, you can do nothing for me. The reason I am dying is because for years I would never take a rest. Even when I went off into the country I always took my books and pen and worked." Thousands and tens of thou- sands of the best brains and hearts of the pulpit, the bar, the medical office and of all the Christian departments of life have simply killed themselves in their young manhood and womanhood because they would not obey Christ's command and take a rest.

Satan is a great strategist. He rarely attacks his enemies in the places where he thinks they are invulnerable. He is always trying new schemes and plans. When Satan finds a true Christian who is consecrated to God's service, he immediately calls together his demoniac lieutenants and says: "That man must be stopped in his career of good works. Those lips of his must be closed. That hand must be made helpless. That pure heart must be struck by some poisonous arrow. That foot of his must be led along the stony path of sin." No vision of earth can arouse Satan into such a frenzied passion as the sight of a good man consecrating his years to good works. So Satan, when he sees a good man consecrating his life to good deeds, immediately dispatches his angels of temptation. First, Satan offers to that good man all the allurements of popular applause and worldly pleasures. The spirit of temptation does not come like a wrinkled old hag, with her bony hands changed into the shape of an eagle's claw, which can be used to kill as well as tear away the quivering flesh. But the spirit of temptation comes in the form of the evil spirit like that which the artist once painted. He drew the spirit of temptation as a beautiful angel. Her lips were wreathed in smiles. Her hair had hidden in it the brilliant colors of the setting sun. Her lap was full of flowers. Her couch was the rim of a cloud, while under the shadow of her flowing robes crouched the demoniac form of death. So Satan tries to destroy the good man by adulation, by applause. By his very successes Satan tries to turn his humble heart of love into a vain heart of sin.

Then if Satan finds that worldly applause and the wine cup and the midnight carousal do not stop the career of the good man who has consecrated his life to good deeds he tries another mode. He says: "I will unkennel and unleash all the bloodhounds of persecution and misrepresentation and slander and turn them upon the good man's track. I will let this pack of demoniac bloodhounds bury their white teeth in his limbs; I will let these bloodhounds leap upon him and try to tear out his heart. Ah, I have made many a good man on account of slander turn and curse God! Perhaps I can destroy this man in this way."

How Satan Kills by Overwork.

But after Satan has tried to destroy this good man by both popular applause and by the hounds of persecution and slander and has failed Satan has one way left. Satan says to himself: "I cannot make that man give up his God, but I can kill him with overwork. I can pile the Christian opportunities of usefulness upon that brilliant, consecrated, young gospel minister; I will keep him working during the day and during the night; I will keep him working during the winter and during the summer; I will give him a bigger church than he can attend to; I will have the editors write him to send articles for their papers; I will have the summer camp meetings steal away his vacation; I will start a revival in his church; I will sap every bit of physical strength he has; I will kill him by overwork, as I killed Kirke White, by offering him a Cambridge prize; I will kill him as I killed William Paley, at thirty-nine years of age the most brilliant Christian intellect of his day; I will kill him, as I have burned out the brain of many a genius, by overwork before that brain lived long enough to light an intellectual torch which would have cast its rays all round the world."

When Satan sees a wife and mother consecrating her life to the Master's service, he says: "I must stop her also. I must kill her by overwork if I cannot do it in any other way." So Satan tells that wife and mother that she must do all the sewing. She must do all the work in the kitchen. She must look after her husband's interests in every way. He may be able to smoke his cigars and have a horse and go to the club, but she must be a good wife and keep every expense down. She must never leave home and take a vacation herself, although her husband can go off a-fishing every spring. The result is that Satan drives that woman on and on and on by overwork until he drives her into the grave. Then Satan laughs a mighty laugh of triumph. He now has full sway in that motherless and wifeless household. The sons and daughters of that mother are easily led off into sin. Why? At the critical time of their lives the mother's hand is not there to guide them. The husband and the father having lost his wife's ballast, becomes financially and spiritually wrecked. All those catastrophes come upon that dead woman's home because she would not let up in her work. She would not take a rest, a complete rest, away from home, which every hardworking Christian woman needs at least once a year.

Give the Brain a Rest.

I beg of you, hardworking Christian men and women, to take a summer vacation because a rested brain can do twice as much work in the same time as a tired one. Some two or three years after I entered the ministry my father wrote me a letter something like this: "Dear Frank, I hear you intend to stay in the city this summer and take no vacation. You say that you cannot afford the time. Great mistake. If you attempt to work all summer, you will have to pay a big price for disobeying nature's laws. Next winter the sermons which you write will be harder to produce and poorer because you have a tired brain. Get out of the city by all means. You owe this rest to your family, your church and your God. A sick or tired minister is of but little use in his study, in the prayer meeting or in his pulpit. I always find that when my brain is rested it does its quickest and best work." That is the kind of a letter which every sensible father will write to his son when he finds that the boy does not know the well known axiom that a rested brain and a rested body can do twice as much work as a tired physical organization.

Every physician will tell you that it is an economy in time for tired men and women to go off and take a vacation and rest. Yet it is a surprising fact how many truly good Christian people feel they cannot leave their home and church work even for a few weeks in a year. If they were rested, they could do much more work for Christ and do it much more easily. Indeed, the older I grow the more I believe that most good people need to take this advice. Most good people look tired. Go where you will, in the store or in the home, and the one great complaint that you hear every spring and summer is: "I am so tired, awfully tired. I am as tired when I get up in the morning as when I lie down to sleep at night." Why, most people in the springtime look as tired as that poor woman who came to me one day and said: "Mr. Talmage, don't talk to me about heaven. I do not want to go to heaven for a long time yet. I am so tired that when I come to die I want God to let me sleep in my grave for a thousand years. Then, after I have become thoroughly rested, I want to open my eyes and see heaven." My overworked Christian friend, if you want to do your best work for Christ next winter you must treat your body just as you would treat a tired, run down, exhausted horse which has been worked all winter. You would take off his shoes and turn him out to grass. You must treat your body as a farmer treats a field which has been overworked in production. He lets it lie fallow for awhile. You should treat your body as nature treats the vegetation. It sends the colds of winter so that all the forces of the trees can lie dormant. As a Christian worker for next winter, when you will have so much to do, what you need now to enable you to do your next winter's duty is not medicine, but rest—complete physical and mental rest; the same kind of rest which Christ gave to his disciples when he led them off into a desert place.

Go Into the Desert.

I beg of you, hardworking Christian men and women, to rest awhile because a summer vacation ought not to cost you financially very much. Christ did not tell his disciples to spend weeks and months in order to get up an expensive wardrobe so they could go to a fashionable hotel. He did not want them to go to a great watering place where they could drink and carouse and turn night into day and day into night. He did not desire that they should go to a place where they would have to be dressed up all the time. To some people the idea of taking a summer vacation is not to find rest, but dissipation. From the time they arrive at the fashionable summer resort they defy every physical law of health. And if after a few weeks of carousal they return to the city with the fatal germs of disease or invalidism planted in their vitals they have no one to blame but themselves. They will be just as much to blame for their oncoming sicknesses as my dissipated classmate was blamed by the professor. He asked for a sick leave. The professor looked at him a moment and said: "No, sir, I will not excuse you. You are young and strong. You have been disobeying the laws of nature, and you must suffer the consequences. You have no business to be sick." So these summer dissipators will find, much to their sorrow, that no man or woman ever found physical rest in a fashionable hotel by dancing until 1 or 2 in the morning. No man ever found health at the summer gaming table or in the hotel barrooms.

The fashionable watering places are very expensive places in which to live. But when Jesus bade his disciples to go into a desert place and rest awhile he commanded them to go into the quietude of the country. One can live very cheaply in the rural districts. It does not cost very much to go into the suburbs of the city and live for a little while next to nature's heart, to dwell in some quiet farmhouse far away from the great, busy world. It does not cost very much to associate for a little while with the cows and the sheep, to carry the lambs and feed the chickens, to toss the hay and to hunt the eggs. It does not cost very much to study God's thoughts in the leaves, to study God's thoughts in the flowers, to hear God's voice in the music of the winds. No somnambulism can so rest the tired brain as the quietude of the woods. That is where God wants us to rest. In the desert place means near to the great, throbbing heart of Mother Nature.

RINGS CLEAR.

On Sunday morning the First Baptist church of Fayetteville, on recommendation of the board of eight deacons, adopted the following preamble and resolution without a dissenting vote:

"Whereas on the 4th day of November, there is to be submitted to the voters of Cumberland county the great moral question of prohibition and license; and

"Whereas the question is purely a moral one and wholly disassociated from politics; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we expect every voting member of this church to register his vote against the liquor traffic and in favor of good morals, happy homes and pure manhood."—The North Carolina Baptist.

Religious News.

During the services at this church Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. Geo. H. McFaden, made a statement that during the past year the church had raised for all purposes $4,500, and that 159 persons had been converted, 92 of them had joined the church. There were 500 members on the church book.—Virginian-Pilot.

Before an audience of 1,500 men Evangelist George R. Stuart spoke at the Lyceum theatre Sunday afternoon on personal purity. His subject, "What is a Man?" dealt largely with the components of a manly, Christian character, which he enumerated as grit, reverence, honesty, purity and temperance. Mr. Stuart spoke without reserve and drove home many wholesome truths. At the conclusion of his discourse, in response to his request that such of his auditors as felt themselves benefited by the talk would rise, the audience arose almost en masse.

The service was made more impressive by the singing of the Y. M. C. A. choir, under the direction of Mr. J. W. Cooper.

At the morning service in the Monumental church on Sunday Mr. Stuart preached on the subject of "Family Religion," and at the evening service his subject was "The First Sin, and God's Search for the First Sinner." Both sermons were masterly and as a result of both there were several who renewed their consecration. At the night service the chancel rail was lined with kneeling penitents, and there were fifteen or twenty conversions.

Monumental church was crowded again last night when Mr. Stuart took for his subject "Opportunity," and preached a sermon that went to the hearts of the people. Fifteen or twenty presented themselves at the altar, and there were some twelve or fifteen conversions. The meetings are growing in interest daily, and a great good is being accomplished.

The mid-day service yesterday was largely attended. There was a helpful talk by the evangelist. The time of meetings is 12 M. and 7:30 P. M.—Virginian-Pilot.

Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead, who comes as the new presiding elder of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore District of the Methodist Church, will reside in Norfolk. Rev. Dr. William E. Judkins, the retiring presiding elder of this district, had his residence in Salisbury, Md. Rev. Dr. Whitehead and wife are expected here the latter part of this week. They will probably board.

Rev. Dr. J. Powell Garland, the new presiding elder of the Portsmouth District, will visit relatives in Lynchburg before taking up his residence in Portsmouth.

It is understood reliably that Rev. Dr. Judkins, late presiding elder of this district, who has been sent as pastor of Port Norfolk M. E. church, could have remained in the presiding eldership had he so desired. He was offered the Rappahannock District. He takes charge at Port Norfolk immediately.

Rev. J. D. Hank, presiding elder of the Charlottesville District, is visiting here and attended the Methodist Preachers' meeting at the Cumberland Street M. E. church to-day.

Rev. D. T. Merritt, the first pastor of Park Place M. E. church, took charge of his work there yesterday, and is most acceptable to the people. The new church building is rapidly going up, and a church organization will shortly be effected.

Rev. G. H. Lambeth preached his farewell sermon last night at LeKies Memorial Methodist church. The largest attendance ever in that church was present—it being packed in every available space. He leaves Thursday for his new field—Boydton, Va.—Norfolk Ledger.

COURT STREET DEDICATION.

One of the most interesting events that Methodism in Lynchburg has ever known was the formal dedication on Sunday of the new Court Street Methodist church, which stands on the corner of Court and Seventh streets, a fair and beautiful monument to the progressive spirit that led to its erection. It would have been difficult to have selected a better or more favorable day for the exercises; for the sunshine was bright and cheery, and there was just enough frost in the air to make out-of-doors exhilarating and indoors pleasant.

The Sunday school room and the main auditorium of the new church are separated from each other by a heavy curtain, which can be removed whenever the occasion renders it necessary. At the service on Sunday it was found that every inch of space was needed to accommodate the crowd, and consequently both the Sunday school and auditorium were utilized, and even then there was not a foot of room to spare, and many persons stood up in the aisles near the doors. Seldom in the history of Lynchburg has such a series of religious meetings been held. The outpouring of people, the spirit of enthusiasm and deep and abiding gratitude constituted a wonderful demonstration of the growth and advancement of Methodism in the city.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The first service of the day was that of the Sunday school, which began in the morning at half-past 9 o'clock, with the superintendent, Mr. E. F. Sheffey, presiding. The following programme was carried out:

Instrumental selection, orchestra; hymn No. 3—"Come, Thou Almighty King," school; prayer, Rev. L. B. Betty; hymn No. 206—"Stand Up for Jesus," congregation; Scripture Responsive Service, No. 5, superintendent and school; song No. 193, "I Love to Tell the Story," school; recitation—"The New Church," Master Frank J. Gilliam; song, "The King of Kings," Primary Department; recitation, Miss Alice Fleming; promotion of members of primary classes to junior department, delivery of certificates, Rev. W. J. Young, D. D.; hymn No. 209—"Onward, Christian Soldier," congregation; recitation—"Thanksgiving," Miss Nannie D. Glass; soprano solo—"Excelsior," Miss Sarah Singleton; address, Bishop H. C. Morrison, D. D.; hymn No. 136—"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," congregation; benediction, Bishop Morrison.

Every musical number of the programme was rendered in a most delightful manner, and the recitations were most interesting and entertaining. The exercises throughout were most creditable to the officers, teachers and scholars, and formed a most pleasing accompaniment for the instructive and appropriate address of Bishop H. C. Morrison.

MORNING SERVICE.

The regular morning service began at 11 o'clock.

With the pastor, Dr. W. J. Young, on the rostrum were Bishops Granbery and Morrison, and Rev. L. B. Betty, of Clay Street church, Richmond, a former pastor of Court Street. In and around the chancel were seated Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead, presiding elder, Rev. James Cannon, of Blackstone, Rev. Asbury Christian and the pastors of the other Methodist churches of the city.

Bishop Granbery, who is greatly beloved in Lynchburg as throughout Virginia, preached to the vast audience. His text was, "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven," from Genesis 28: 17. He said in part:

A man of the five senses would have denied that any house was there. But Jacob, despite his moral crudeness at the time, possessed the rudiments of a spiritual man. He believed in the invisible God. Lo, he called the bare spot Bethel, house of God. Court Street church is a substantial, commodious, beautiful building. But to the men of faith its worth will consist in this, that it is a meeting place between God and His people.

God dwells in hearts, not in houses. It would be a sad thing to us, if His presence and manifestation were limited to set places and hours. God dwells in us, and we dwell in God. We need not move a step, nor wait a moment, to find God. Wherever there is a worshipper, there God is. He does not need the house, but we do.

It is an abuse of the Lord's day to excuse ourselves for worldliness through the six days because we attended divine service on the Sabbath. But comparatively few persons have the opportunity to be occupied wholly, or even largely, with spiritual affairs day after day. A man may be living for his wife and children, while his hands and head are so busy in his work, that he cannot be thinking of them. So the purpose to glorify God may sanctify the common business of the week, although it engrosses your attention at the time. Blessed is the hour when in the closet or the family circle you can commune with God. Blessed is the Sabbath, when you can rest from secular toil and thought and wait on the Lord. The man of God, separated from secular things, has prepared a message, a lesson, for you. The worship is not merely personal, but collective, the limited service of the Church. We have fellowship one with another in our fellowship with God. The Church as a house is a place where the Church as a household come together to praise and pray, and to enjoy the divine presence and benediction.

There is a close connection, action and reaction, between the weekly life and the church service. Week-days may spoil Sundays. What we are at home, in business, in society, in pleasure, we bring to God's house, and often it is worldly, frivolous, ill-tempered, wilful self. Not only the preacher and the sexton should prepare for the worship, but the congregation should come in the right frame. We should go up in the spirit to the church, as well as pray for the spirit while there. Purity of life and spirituality of mind are the creators of acceptable and profitable worship.

The church is far more than our own spiritual culture, it is a place for God's work. Let the Sunday school illustrate this truth. Religion is love, and love delights in serving others. The purpose is not merely to build up believers, but to awaken the careless, to rescue the perishing. It should be the birthplace of souls. The pulpit will advocate all good works; will instruct and inspire the people to give and to labor for the relief of want and suffering, for Christian education, for the extension of the kingdom of heaven in all the world. The house of God should be a centre of activities for the suppression of sin and the reign of righteousness and love.

After the sermon the church trustees and the stewards of the church advanced to the chancel rail, where Rev. Thos. H. Early, chairman of the trustees, presented the new church building to be set apart as a house of worship dedicated to the service of God. Bishop Granbery accepted the same by reading the special prayer from the Church Discipline. The exercises were then closed with the benediction by Rev. Thomas H. Early.

COMMUNION SERVICE.

Perhaps one of the sweetest and most impressive services of the dedication was that of the afternoon, when three infants were baptized and six new members were received into the church by the pastor, Dr. Young, and the Lord's Supper was solemnly celebrated, the ceremony being conducted by Dr. Paul Whitehead, for four years presiding elder of the Lynchburg district, assisted by Rev. L. B. Betty and other ministers.

Those members received on profession of faith were Edward F. Sheffey, Jr., Miss Helen Gregory, Mrs. S. H. Franklin, and Mr. Wade W. Akers, and those received by letter were Mrs. F. V. Augustus and Mrs. E. L. Hines.

The following are the names of the infants: John Randolph Jones, Susie Sanford Glass, and Catherine May Franklin.

THE EVENING SERVICE.

At the night service the auditorium and Sunday school room were again packed with an immense congregation.

The eloquent Bishop Morrison delivered the sermon, and his distinct enunciation made his words plainly audible in every part of the building.

Bishop Morrison announced his subject as "God's partnership with us," taking his text from the evening lesson, I Cor. 3: 9. "This text," he said, "announces a labor union of God with men, a divine-human reciprocity; laborers together with God. This earth on which we live is as a ball which is played back and forth, between the human and the divine. Man is at work on it; God at work in and through it, and by this co-work with God man produces that on which he subsists in this present life. The church in the world is the divine training school in which we work out our salvation. God could have as easily and readily created us in maturity without the long and hazardous pilgrimage through which we pass, as the first pair, but the matter of character is involved, and that must be of our own making. That was the absent element in Adam, who was perfect, but there was no volition, for God made him that way. But we are under grace, and grace begins at the bottom. Volition is the keynote of character. God gives us a chance to make ourselves. Every man is self made; some have ready made facilities; others have to make their facilities and then make themselves. You are just what you have made yourself under grace; you are a specimen of your own work. Why should you fear for the day of judgment? What has it to do with the making of your destiny? You make your own destiny; every day you live is the making of destiny. This day is fraught with responsibilities more awful than the day of judgment."

"What is the divine purpose in this partnership? Surely not a mercenary one. He has entered into this partnership to bring us up from nothing, from hopelessness, to bring us into possession of riches, eternal and imperishable. I never received very well that statement that God's chief end is to glorify Himself. Ours is not a selfish God. His thoughts are not introverted, they are ever towards us. It was in thought of man He created the angel host. The preparation of a remedy for sin was no after thought. There is a sufficiency in that fact to cause any thoughtful man to renounce the world and give himself to God. This partnership is at God's cost. Co-workers but not joint stockholders. God puts in all the capital. Notwithstanding all the monopolies, trusts and combinations, there is not an ounce of coal, or steel or any other element that God has not produced. The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof. This is just as true in the moral and spiritual world. If man is not absolutely lost then he does not need a Saviour. Just as we get vegetable life out of the earth by the sun, so we get spiritual life out of the incarnation by the Holy Spirit. What possibilities we have, but how helpless we are. We need the divine blessing to develop us. By clinging to Christ it is possible for us to come to perfection.

"The one work of the Church in this partnership is to save man. God intends for the Church to save humanity not only in the highest, but in the lowest possible plane. We cannot do this work outside of this partnership. Let the Church seek for the salvation of men in the low places, as well as in the high, and God will see to it that the Church does not suffer while she does her duty. What Methodism needs to-day is a better connection with the great source of divine power. What would be the result if the six thousand pastors in Southern Methodism, representing a million and a half of people, were in touch with God as Elijah was, and could call down fire from heaven? It needs fewer dead churches, and more life in those that are not dead. We are laborers together with God. Let us faithfully do our work and He will give us the increase."

Prayer was then offered, and after a hymn by the choir and congregation, the benediction was impressively and feelingly pronounced by Rev. J. T. Whitley, late pastor of Centenary Methodist church, who is now presiding elder of the Rappahannock district. The congregation was then dismissed, and thus the exercises of the dedication came to a close.

The committee who had charge of the work of decorating the main auditorium was as follows: Mrs. S. F. Poinexter, chairman; Mrs. Peter Ainslie, Mrs. Giles H. Miller, Mrs. J. E. Ware.

The following committees had charge of the Sunday school exercises:

Mrs. Cornelia W. Brown, chairman; Miss Annie Lind Forsberg, Miss Ruth Jennings, Colonel J. B. Gregory, Mr. E. L. Bell, Mr. E. F. Sheffey.

Music Committee—Professor W. S. Adams, Mr. Walker Pettyjohn, Mrs. Frank West.

Decorative Committee—Mrs. T. D. Christian, Miss Amanda Williams, Miss Duncan Williams.

The beautiful palms and cysantemums used in decorating Court Street church on the occasion of the dedication services were denoted by the Rivermont Floral Company and Mr. Harry R. Brown.—Lynchburg News.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

The first meeting of the Methodist preachers of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley and vicinity for the new Conference year was held at Cumberland Street M. E. church at 10:45 A. M. yesterday, with the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor in the chair.

Prayer was offered by Rev. J. D. Hank, presiding elder of the Charlottesville district.

The following are the new members of the organization for the present Conference year: Rev. R. D. Smart, D. D., pastor of Epworth church, Norfolk; Rev. Paul Whitehead, D. D., presiding elder of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore district; Rev. Dr. J. Powell Garland, presiding elder of the Portsmouth district; Rev. L. W. Guyer, pastor of Owens Memorial church, Portsmouth; Rev. J. B. Winn, pastor of Ghent church, and Rev. J. W. Stiff, pastor of LeKies Memorial church, Atlantic City. These, with the pastors who were members last year and who have been returned to their fields of labor, constitute the organization the present Conference year.

The ministers who go to other fields of labor are Rev. R. H. Bennett, who is presiding elder of the Richmond district; Rev. W. R. Crowder, who has been transferred to the Eastern Shore and stationed at Keller Va.; Rev. Graham H. Lambeth goes to Boydton, Va., as the successor of Rev. J. B. Winn, and Rev. Ernest Stevens succeeds Rev. J. W. Stiff at Memorial church, Lynchburg.

PLEASANT RESOLUTIONS.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt offered the following preamble and resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas at the recent session of the Virginia Conference, Revs. R. H. Bennett, Graham H. Lambeth, Ernest Stevens, W. R. Crowder and N. R. Smith were assigned to other fields of labor; therefore be it

"Resolved, That our association with them has been most pleasant and helpful, and we wish them a successful year in their new charges.

"D. T. MERRITT, J. N. LATHAM."

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth had a great day at LeKies Memorial church Sunday. There was an immense turnout at the Sunday school, and at both the morning and evening services, the edifice was filled to overflowing, these occasions being the farewell exercises of Mr. Lambeth. Both preacher and people enjoyed a precious season.

Rev. W. P. Jordan reported a fine attendance on the Sunday school at Park Place Sunday, the new pastor, Rev. Daniel T. Merritt, was present and was received with a most hearty and cordial welcome. Mr. Jordan preached at Trinity Sunday night to a large congregation.

Rev. Dr. Barrett, of the Christian Memorial temple, reported a fine Sunday school and large attendance at both morning and evening services. The day was a pleasant and profitable one to all.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached to exceptionally large congregations at Epworth Sunday. He received one new member by certificate.

Rev. E. K. Odell, who has been returned to Huntersville, was warmly received by his people. He preached morning and night Sunday.

Rev. W. R. Proctor had fine congregations to hear him at McKendree Sunday. He received one member by certificate.

Dr. Judkins, the new pastor of Port Norfolk church, came into the meeting to greet the members, but asked to be excused from remaining on account of pressing business. He said he would be present at all future meetings.—Virginian-Pilot.

To prove that it will not cost very much to go out for a few days into the quietude of the country and rest awhile I would like to ask you a pertinent question. You have not had a vacation—that is, the kind of vacation Christ wants you to take—for a long while. How much did you spend to doctor's bills last year? "Well," you answer, "last winter was a hard winter for me. I seemed to be taking cold all the time. My throat was very weak, and each draft would affect it. One week I was in bed threatened with pneumonia; another time I had bronchitis. I was away from the store about ten days. My doctor's bills were very high. I have not paid them all up yet." I would like to ask you another pertinent question. What did your druggist bills amount to last winter? "Oh," you answer, "I was buying medicines all the time—medicines for my digestion, medicines for my cough, medicines for headaches, tablets for this and that and the other thing."

The Economy of a Vacation.

Now, my friends, you are ready, I think, to listen to rational advice. You know that one of the great medical tenets states that it is far better to prevent disease rather than cure the disease after it has come. Old Dr. Samuel D. Gross, the greatest surgical authority of his day, used to say to his students, "Gentlemen, any stupid butcher with a meat ax can chop off a leg, but it often takes a very great surgeon to save one." Any man can take medicine after he is sick, but it takes a wise man to look far enough ahead to keep his body in such physical trim that he will not get sick. And, my friends, would it not be far better for you as Christian workers to look ahead and spend the money which you might give to the doctors and the druggists in taking a summer vacation? Would it not be far more economical for you to spend some money in tuning up your physical system by taking a rest? Then you can resist the ordinary diseases; then you will not have to be placed upon an invalid's bed until God says that your work is done; then you will save money by resting as well as the precious time which you can ill afford to lose from your next winter's work.

But the greatest of all advantages in going off into a desert place to rest awhile is that we can there come nearer to Christ than we have ever been before. In this age of work but few men have time to stop and think. Daily tasks become so absorbing that the second duty crowds itself upon you as soon as the first duty is done. The rushing electric cars whirl the husbands and fathers and brothers to the store. From morning until night the customers have to be seen. Then come the evening tasks. And, though "a man works from sun to sun, a woman's work is never done."

But when the Christian goes off into the country to rest he can go off to pray in the same spirit with which Christ went. When he gets away from the store, the factory, the home, his rested mind will begin to clear. As he saunters out to lie down under the shadows of the trees with his Bible he will begin to realize how the goodness of God has followed him all the days of his life. He will begin to see in the quietude of the woods that even in his troubles the hand of God has been leading him, that all things work together for good for those who love the Lord. Then as he sits there in the woods upon the hillside with the brook gurgling by his side he will think that he is sitting at Christ's feet, just the same as the disciples of old used to do in the open air. Then he will hear a chirp. When he looks up, he will see a little bird swinging upon the tree branches over his head. He will turn and read from Matthew: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. Fear ye not, therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows." As the Christian wife walks through the fields and picks the daisies and clover tops and the golden-rod and the bright yellow buttercups she will remember the words Jesus spoke when he said that as he cared for the lilies of the fields so he would care for her. There is no place on earth where a man can get so close to God as with an open Bible in the quietude of the woods.

Never was I more impressed with this thought than some years ago when I visited a humble little country church nestling among the Berkshire hills. People have often asked me what was the most impressive religious service I ever attended. I have worshiped in the Metropolitan tabernacle of London and witnessed the marvelous power Charles H. Spurgeon had over his great audience. I have been at the feet of Joseph Parker, the mightiest one man religious force today in all England. I have heard Henry Ward Beecher and often Mr. Moody. I have heard nearly all of the great living preachers this side of the Atlantic and many from beyond the seas, but the most impressive religious service I ever attended was in that little white meeting house way up among the Berkshire hills. There were only about thirty-five people present. The little organ was not worth more than $10. The young girl who sat and played the hymns knew but little about music, but for three long hours before I entered that building I had been communing with God in the quietude of the hills. Alone with my Heavenly Father I saw the setting sun. Alone with my Heavenly Father, I had been living in memory over my past sinful life. Alone with my Heavenly Father, I was telling the Saviour about my troubles. And when I saw the little light of the meeting house I was beckoned in. Then the first prayer melted my heart until the whole room for me was filled with the Holy Spirit.

Take Christ Along.

Oh, my brother and sister, I want you to go out into the country not only to get a physical rest, but, like the disciples of old, I want you to take Christ along. In the quietude of the woods, with your open Bible, I want you to keep open a receptive ear so that your Heavenly Father may talk to you, and by prayer I want you to talk to your Heavenly Father. If you will only do this, you will not only in the country draw nearer to your Heavenly Father, but you will find that Christ during all the long oncoming winter months will stay very close to you. I want you to get thoroughly acquainted with Christ. I want you to realize that he is the dearest, the tenderest, the kindest, the most forgiving and the most loving companion a pardoned sinner could ever have.

A correspondent has sent us a letter, which he received from the Red Cross Company of Kentucky. This is a very pious name, and the very pious business of the company is to distribute medicine cabinets containing a variety of liquors, which the letter says are pure. While the pretense is that the liquors are intended for medicines, the quantity furnished indicates a far different use. We cannot help thinking that this liquor selling company has done something like borrowing "the livery of heaven to serve the devil in."

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu-

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

AN IMPORTANT REPORT.

Looked at from the practical standpoint of immediate results, the most important report presented to the Conference, and adopted by it, was the report on Temperance. The Conference ordered the report to be printed in the Advocate, Methodist and Recorder, thus showing its appreciation of the matters presented in the report.

The memorial to the Legislature to pass the Mann bill should be followed by such action as will deluge our legislators with petitions and personal letters from now until the time for the vote. The bill will not come up till after the holidays. In the meanwhile may not the committee appointed by the Conference to present the matter to the Legislature ask the assistance of pastors, as follows:

1. Preach the sermon and read the discipline on this subject as requested by the Conference during this month of December. It is an appropriate time to preach on the subject.

2. In the sermon explain to our people the provisions of the Mann bill, and show them that with the new registration, if this bill is adopted, the saloon can be swept out of the country and out of the small towns of the State.

3. Start petitions at once and get signers, both of registered voters and ladies. Urge your members to write personal letters to their representatives in the Legislature. If this bill is not passed, it will be because the anti-saloon people in the State do not work for its passage.

It is greatly to be hoped that all of our pastors in both city and country will preach on the subject while the bill is pending, and that our circuit preachers will preach at every church in the circuit.

We give the report on Temperance adopted by the Conference, and immediately following we print the full text of the Mann bill. The important clause in the law is put in italics. Cut the law out and have it to refer to. Write a letter to your county paper, telling the people of the change proposed by the law. Agitation is the need of the hour.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

Your Committee on Temperance begs leave to present the following report: There is among us no more tremendous, far-reaching and vital question than that of drunkenness. Because of its evil tendencies and baneful effects, it outweighs all others. We cannot examine any subject that has to do with the well-being of men, physically, morally or religiously, without having to reckon with this monster evil. It is the centre of all social and political mischief, while more than any other one thing it neutralizes the work of the Church and makes void the efforts of the pulpit for the salvation of souls. It produces crime, bars progress, baffles reform, impedes civilization, vitiates legislation, obstructs education and handicaps religion. It degrades millions, brutalizing and soddening them to the lowly level of savages, and filling the centres of population with creatures whose condition and habits are a menace to every moral and material interest of their generation.

The mightiness of this drink evil ought to stir the martial spirit of every soldier of the Son of man. This is no time to dilly-dally—no time for half-hearted measures. He who loves his Lord ought not dare to be neutral. It is not enough that we be clear ourselves, that we have stood before the altar of the Church and taken a vow to be sober, a vow which we have not broken and do not mean to break. He is a sorry soldier indeed whose warfare winds up at his own door. And he who thinks that he is in the Church to save himself alone has at best a doubtful hold on eternal life.

So far as our creed is concerned, the Methodist Church gives no uncertain sound on this subject, while the Virginia Conference has, year by year, resolved in its assemblies and printed in its minutes, and preached in its pulpits that drunkenness is a sin, liquor selling a crime, and a licensed saloon a stigma and a shame. What we need is not resolution, but revolution—not the declaration of sentiment, but its translation into action.

What we say here in words let us say elsewhere in deeds. We proclaim here the saloon ought to die. Let us declare by our actions elsewhere that it shall die. Let us join forces with every foe of the liquor traffic and strike together against this enemy of all we hold sacred. Let us teach the young the evils of intemperance, let us persuade the tempted; let us, through pen and pulpit, mould public sentiment till it shall have dawned even on the dull brain of the professional politician that he dare no longer legislate in the interests of drunkard making; and in it all, and through it all, God's people need to stand together, and swear together that, the eternal God being our helper, we will never sheathe the sword nor end the battle till the day come when not an open saloon disgraces with its vile traffic this ancient Commonwealth, which our fathers won with their blood, and for whose redemption to Christ mighty men of God suffered, toiled and died.

For our good cheer be it said that the prospects before were never brighter than now. The quickening of the temperance sentiment in our State, by reason of the work of the Anti-Saloon League and the consequent union of the various temperance forces gives us an opportunity that we have not had before, and puts upon us an added obligation to increase our activity and to press the battle at every point against this pitiless foe of our common humanity.

We offer for adoption the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1, That our pastors be requested to preach a sermon on temperance at every church the coming year, and to read, in connection with the same, the chapter in our Discipline on the subject of temperance.

Resolved, 2, That we pledge ourselves, as a Church, to do all in our power to banish the saloon from our State; and to advance in every possible way the cause of temperance in our midst.

Resolved, 3, That we welcome the Anti-Saloon League to our State as a valuable ally in this great work, and assure the League of our hearty co-operation with it in making effective its motto, "The Saloon Must Go."

Resolved, 4, That the Conference elect to the Anti-Saloon League, to assemble December 9th, in Washington, one member of the Board of Direction of the League, and two delegates.

Resolved, 5, That the Conference appoint a committee of three to present the following memorial to the Legislature, through the proper channels:

To the Honorable Members of the Senate and House of Delegates of the State of Virginia:

We, the preachers and lay delegates of the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Conference assembled at Richmond, Va., representing 90,000 Methodist communicants, respectfully request that the Legislature now in session pass the liquor license law offered by Senator W. H. Mann, of Nottoway county, or some bill containing the main provisions of the same—viz.: Requiring the consent of the majority of the legalized voters in any magisterial district, and also requiring that assurance of

BISHOP SMITH'S FIRST CONFERENCE.

All of our readers are interested in Bishop A. Coke Smith. The following items are taken from the North Carolina Christian Advocate in reference to his first Conference:

The Bishop's sermon on Sunday morning on the text, "What think ye of Christ?" made a great impression on the Conference and the great congregation present. It was not only masterly in thought, but full of spiritual power and unction. No Bishop ever impressed himself more favorably upon North Carolina Methodism.

In announcing one of the trial committees at the late Conference, Bishop Smith said: "A Methodist preacher's character is about all he has. I do hope if hereafter any charges are preferred against a preacher everything will be in hand when the Conference convenes, so that the case may be considered at once. Let everything be carefully prepared. Don't do anything in a slovenly manner. In a matter of this kind guard the Church and guard the man as well. This little discipline of ours is the work of men who love God and love their brethren. This case must be considered carefully and we will stay here until we dispose of it."

ECHOES FROM BISHOP SMITH'S ADDRESS TO THE CANDIDATES FOR ADMISSION.

"In the work of the ministry you must give your entire time to the work. You must visit your people as a pastor, for there is a difference between a social visit and a pastoral visit. And you must be studious men. God doesn't inspire laziness.

"You are to conform to the Discipline of the Church. You can't rule other people if you are not willing to be ruled yourself. If you are not willing to submit to authority yourself you are not fit to use authority yourself.

"Some preachers I have known are so eagle eyed as to see so many faults in other men that they can't see a blot as big as your hand on themselves. Never cut off a man as long as there is a chance to save him. Jesus Christ tried to save Judas up to the time of the betrayal. Be patient with the erring, but don't spare sin. Don't scold people from the pulpit, for that manner more often angers men than saves them. The way to reach men is to go to them personally and win them in the spirit of love.

"Keep out of debt. Many preachers are handicapped all their lives and their usefulness injured by debt. You

Shaw had charge of the social department, whose special care it was to see that the men were made welcome to the cozy, cheerful reading room, where they might chat, smoke, read, write or play games, according to fancy.

But Craig felt that the success or failure of the scheme would largely depend upon the character of the resident manager, who, while caring for reading room and hall, would control and operate the important department represented by the coffee room.

"At this point the whole business may come to grief," he said to Mrs. Mavor, without whose counsel nothing was done.

"Why come to grief?" she asked brightly.

"Because if we don't get the right man that's what will happen," he replied in a tone that spoke of anxious worry.

"But we shall get the right man, never fear." Her serene courage never faltered. "He will come to us."

Craig turned and gazed at her in frank admiration and said:

"If I only had your courage!"

"Courage!" she answered quickly.

"It is not for you to say that." And at his answering look the red came into her cheek and the depths in her eyes glowed, and I marveled and wondered, looking at Craig's cool face, whether his blood were running evenly through his veins. But his voice was quiet—a shade too quiet, I thought—as he gravely replied:

"I would often be a coward but for the shame of it."

And so the league waited for the man to come who was to be resident manager and make the new enterprise a success. And come he did, but the manner of his coming was so extraordinary that I have believed in the doctrine of a special providence ever since, for, as Craig said, "If he had come straight from heaven, I could not have been more surprised."

While the league was thus waiting, its interest centered upon Slavin, chiefly because he represented more than any other the forces of the enemy, and, though Billy Green stood between him and the vengeance of the angry men who would have made short work of him and his saloon, nothing could save him from himself, and after the funeral Slavin went to his bar and drank whisky as he had never drunk before. But the more he drank the fiercer and gloomier he became, and when the men drinking with him chaffed him he swore deeply and with such threats that they left him alone.

It did not help Slavin either to have Nixon stride in through the crowd drinking at his bar and give him words of warning.

"It is not your fault, Slavin," he said in a slow, cool voice, "that you and your precious crew didn't send me to my death too. You've won your bet, but I want to say that next time, though you are seven to one or ten times that, when any of you boys offer me a drink I'll take you to mean fight, and I'll not disappoint you, and some one will be killed." And, so saying, he strode out again, leaving a mean looking crowd of men behind him. All who had not been concerned in the business at Nixon's shack expressed approval of his position and hoped he would see it through.

But the impression of Nixon's words upon Slavin was as nothing compared with that made by Geordie Crawford. It was not what he said so much as the manner of awful solemnity he carried. Geordie was struggling conscientiously to keep his promise to "not be 'ard on the boys" and found considerable relief in remembering that he had agreed "to leave them the Almighty." But the manner of leaving them was so solemnly awful that I could not wonder that Slavin's superstitious Irish nature supplied him with supernatural terrors. It was the second day after the funeral that Geordie and I were walking toward Slavin's. There was a great shout of laughter as we drew near.

Geordie stopped short and, saying, "We'll juist gang in a meenute," passed through the crowd and up to the bar.

"Michael Slavin," began Geordie, and the men stared in dead silence, with their glasses in their hands—"Michael Slavin, I promised the lad I'd bear ye nae ill will, but juist leave ye tae the Almighty, an' I want tae tell ye that I'm keepin' ma wur-r-d. But," and here he raised his hand, and his voice became preternaturally solemn, "his bluid is upon yer han's. Do ye no' see it?"

His voice rose sharply, and as he pointed Slavin instinctively glanced at his hands, and Geordie added:

"Aye, an' the Lord will require it o' ye an' yer hoose."

They told me that Slavin shivered as if taken with ague after Geordie went out, and, though he laughed and swore, he did not stop drinking till he sank in a drunken stupor and had to be carried to bed. His little French Canadian wife could not understand the change that had come over her husband.

"He's like one bear," she confided to Mrs. Mavor, to whom she was showing her baby of a year old. "He's not kees me one tam dis day. He's mos' hawful bad. He's not even look at de baby."

And this seemed sufficient proof that something was seriously wrong, for she went on to say:

"He's tink more for dat feel baby dan for de whole worl'. He's tink more for dat baby dan for me." But she shrugged her pretty little shoulders in depreciation of her speech.

"You must pray for him," said Mrs. Mavor, "and all will come right."

"Ah, madame," she replied earnestly, "every day, every day, I pray la sainte Vierge et tous les saints for him."

"You must pray to your Father in heaven for him."

"Ah, oui, I weel pray." And Mrs. Mavor sent her away bright with smiles and with new hope and courage in her heart.

She had very soon need of all her courage, for at the week's end her baby fell dangerously ill. Slavin's anxiety and fear were not relieved much by the reports the men brought him from time to time of Geordie's ominous forebodings, for Geordie had no doubt that the Avenger of blood was hot upon Slavin's trail, and as the sickness grew he became confirmed in this conviction. While he could not be said to find satisfaction in Slavin's impending affliction, he could hardly hide his complacency in the promptness of Providence in vindicating his theory of retribution.

But Geordie's complacency was somewhat rudely shocked by Mr. Craig's answer to this theory one day.

"You read your Bible to little profit, it seems to me, Geordie, or perhaps you have never read the Master's teaching about the tower of Siloam. Better read that and take that warning to yourself."

Geordie gazed after Mr. Craig as he turned away and muttered:

"The toor o' Siloam, is it? Aye, I ken fine about the toor o' Siloam an' about the toor o' Babel as weel, an' I've read, too, about the blasphemious Herod an' sic like. Mon, but he's a hot heided laddie an' lacks discreemeenation."

"What about Herod, Geordie?" I asked.

"Aboot Herod?" with a strong tinge of contempt in his tone. "Aboot Herod? Mon, hae ye no' read in the Screepturs aboot Herod an' the wur-r-ms in the wame o' him?"

"Oh, yes, I see," I hastened to answer.

"Aye, a fule can see what's flapped in his face," with which bit of proverbial philosophy he suddenly left me. But Geordie thenceforth contented himself, in Mr. Craig's presence at least, with ominous head shakings, equally aggravating and impossible to answer.

That same night, however, Geordie showed that with all his theories he had a nae true heart, for he came in haste to Mrs. Mavor to say:

"Ye'll be needed ower yonder, I'm thinkin'."

"Why? Is the baby worse? Have you been in?"

"Na, na," replied Geordie cautiously; "I'll no' gang where I'm no' wanted, but yon pair thing ye can hear ootside weepin' an' moatin'."

"She'll maybe need ye tae," he went on dubiously to me. "Ye're a kin' o' doctor, I hear," not committing himself to any opinion as to my professional value.

But Slavin would have none of me, having got the doctor sober enough to prescribe.

The interest of the camp in Slavin was greatly increased by the illness of his baby, which was to him as the apple of his eye. There were a few who, impressed by Geordie's profound convictions upon the matter, were inclined to favor the retribution theory and connect the baby's illness with the vengeance of the Almighty. Among these few was Slavin himself, and, goaded by his remorseful terrors, he sought relief in drink. But this brought him only deeper and fiercer gloom, so that between her suffering child and her savagely despairing husband the poor mother was desperate with terror and grief.

"Ah, madame," she sobbed to Mrs. Mavor, "my heart is broke for him. He's beet noting for tree days, but jis dreensk, dreensk, dreensk."

The next day a man came for me in haste. The baby was dying, and the doctor was drunk. I found the little one in a convulsion lying across Mrs. Mavor's knees, the mother kneeling beside it, wringing her hands in dumb agony, and Slavin standing near, silent and suffering. I glanced at the bottle of medicine upon the table and asked Mrs. Mavor the dose and found the baby had been poisoned. My look of horror told Slavin something was wrong, and, striding to me, he caught my arm and asked:

"What is it? Is the medicine wrong?"

I tried to put him off, but his grietightened till his fingers seemed to reach the bone.

"The dose is certainly too large. But let me go. I must do something."

He let me go at once, saying in a voice that made my heart sore for him, "He has killed my baby; he has killed my baby." And then he cursed the doctor with awful curses and with a look of such murderous fury on his face that I was glad the doctor was too drunk to appear.

His wife, hearing his curses and understanding the cause, broke out into wailing hard to bear.

"Ah, mon petit ange! It is dat wheesky dat's keel mon baby. Ah, mon cheri, mon amour! Ah, mon Dieu! Ah, Michael! How often I say that wheesky he's not good ting."

It was more than Slavin could bear, and with awful curses he passed out.

Mrs. Mavor laid the baby in its crib, for the convulsion had passed away, and, putting her arms about the wailing little Frenchwoman, comforted and soothed her as a mother might her child.

"And you must help your husband," I heard her say. "He will need you more than ever. Think of him."

"Ah, oui, I weel," was the quick reply, and from that moment there was no more wailing.

It seemed no more than a minute till Slavin came in again, sober, quiet and steady. The passion was all gone from his face, and only the grief remained.

As we stood leaning over the sleeping child the little thing opened its eyes, saw its father and smiled. It was too much for him. The big man dropped on his knees with a dry sob.

"Is there no chance at all, at all?" he whispered, but I could give him no hope. He immediately rose and, pulling himself together, stood perfectly quiet.

A new terror seized upon the mother.

"My baby is not—what you call it?" going through the form of baptism. "An' he will not come to la sainte Vierge," she said, crossing herself.

"Do not fear for your little one," said Mrs. Mavor, still with her arms about her. "The good Saviour will take your darling into his own arms."

But the mother would not be comforted by this, and Slavin, too, was uneasy.

"Where is Father Goulet?" he asked.

"Ah, you were not good to the holy pere de las tam, Michael," she replied sadly. "The saints are not please for you."

"Where is the priest?" he demanded.

"I know not for sure. At de Landin', dat's lak."

"I'll go for him," he said.

But his wife clung to him, beseeching him not to leave her, and indeed he was loath to leave his little one.

I found Craig and told him the difficulty. With his usual promptness he was ready with a solution.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 53, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

FAREWELL SERMON OF REV. R. H. BENNETT.

A TOUCHING SCENE.

The announcement in the Virginian Pilot Saturday that Rev. R. H. Bennett would preach his last sermon at Epworth Methodist church Sunday attracted large congregations to hear him. Below is an outline of his morning discourse, and a brief reference to his closing sermon at night:

His morning sermon was on "The Knightliness of the Christ Spirit." Text—Rom. 15: 1: "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves."

The learned preacher said in part: "The study of medieval chivalry is full of romantic interest. It was a noble theory, that of the old knighthood, the vow of temperance, chastity and valor, the life devoted to redressing wrong and succoring the weak and oppressed. And when we look for its genesis we find that the creed of the knight was a partial imitation of the spirit of Christianity."

"Every church may be divided into the many weak and the few strong. The few strong in faith, talent, wealth, and the great outlying multitude with their indifference, vacillation, petulance or strife. Every government is at heart an oligarchy, whatever be its form. Self pleasing is the weakness of the strong. The man of strong faith is apt to be overbearing. In an orphan asylum marching the little fellows are put first, that the gait may be gauged by their pace. So the Church and civilization can never advance faster than the weakest member."

"There is a great argument in this text for a society in our town most commendable in its aims and in need of help, the 'Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.' How weakness appeals to strength. The babe on father's knee rules because it is the weaker. It is not a sign of strength but of weakness to sneer at weakness. The bully is ever at heart an arrant coward. 'The bravest are the tenderest, the loving are the daring.' Douglass must be tender and true as well as brave."

"But, no man has a right to claim indulgence as the weak brother. Beggars must not air their sores to excite sympathy, or cripples demand support as a right."

"The weak brother is a man with a poor heredity. Bear with him. How can you expect a man whose father was a grasshopper and whose mother was a butterfly to take the deep and practical view of life that to you with your rich mental and moral inheritance seems proper? The weak brother is the man with imperfect training in an unworthy home, or the man with unfortunately sensitive nature, or with limited spiritual capacity, or the honest doubter, or the child, or the unconverted man whose eyes are blinded. Bear with them. Make due allowance for their situation, and do not judge them by your own high standard."

"Sins against weakness may go long unpunished, but the day of reckoning is ever sure and in proportion to the aggravation. Robespierre abused the power entrusted to him and oppressed and murdered the helpless by the thousand, but at last the mob dragged him through the streets of Paris to the guillotine himself. It is said that as the death cart rumbled over the cobble stones, and he stood in it in chains smeared with the mud of the street, his face stained with blood and his jaw shattered by a pistol ball, an old man hobbled up to the cart and pointing his finger up to him, cried: 'Yes, Robespierre, there is a God.'

"We may sin against the weak by puzzling them with deep and disputed points of doctrine and condemning them if they do not say our 'Shibboleth,' by blaming them for not feeling all our ecstasies and sorrows of experience, thus laying them upon Procrustean beds, by looking for more fruit in them than is reasonable, by fault-finding and never commending, and by dwelling on the dark side of Christian life."

"Unkindness to the weak really works damage to the strong. Vivisection gives the rabbit an hour or two of physical pain, but callouses the soul of the man who can thus torture a helpless fellow creature. We have abolished the whipping post, not because there are not many scamps who richly deserve its flogging, but because of its detrimental effects upon the Anglo-Saxon civilization which would permit it. The inquisition wrought more real havoc among its administrators than among its victims. For the same reason Spain suffered more real hurt from the brutal war in Cuba than that hapless isle itself."

"Would you see the greatest instance in all the annals of chivalry of strength stooping to lift up weakness? Behold the cross. A blind justice holding the scales and demanding the last pound of flesh, even though nearest the heart, is the world's ideal. God's revelation of His heart to us is when He sets a cross upon a hill and hangs thereon in willing agony His only begotten Son and bids the world behold the love of God."

EVENING SERMON.

At the evening service there was a magnificent audience present. Mr. Bennett preached from Ecclesiastes 8: 10: "And so I saw the wicked buried who had come and gone from the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done."

At the close of the sermon Mr. Bennett spoke substantially as follows:

"I can readily understand how an official board can take the action that the board of this church has taken in regard to a new pastor, acting on their judgment of what is best without any personal feeling towards the man who leaves, and as I wrote to the official board when they notified me in August last that they had asked for Dr. Smart as their new pastor, so I say now to the congregation, I most gladly agree to this arrangement, and if any one should feel uncomfortable in heart because I do not continue at Epworth as pastor, I wish to say from the bottom of my heart that the greatest favor they can do me is to give Dr. Smart their most cordial support in everything. What good could it do to give the cold shoulder to one man because you love another? I want this church to stand as a unit in its great work for God in this community. I want the Virginia Conference to stand as a unit in its great work. I want the Church of God everywhere to present an unbroken front to its hosts of evil."

"Give Dr. Smart large congregations next Sunday and take him by the hand and welcome him. None but those who have been themselves strangers in a strange land can understand how much this will help a man to do his best work."

"Let me thank the choir also for their faithful and efficient service since we have been together. I do not care to hear better music than they have given us from Sunday to Sunday. I am glad that there is one choir without a discord among its members, and that is the one in the gallery overhead. I rejoice in their harmony, musical and personal, and also in the fact that as far as I know every member of the choir is a member of some Christian church in good standing."

When Mr. Bennett finished the choir sang with much feeling the familiar selection, "God be with you 'till we meet again."

It was plainly visible that the whole congregation was deeply affected, hundreds present sobbing freely. After the benediction had been pronounced, hundreds in the audience went forward and bade Mr. Bennett an affectionate adieu. It was a most pathetic scene, and one long to be remembered. Mr. Bennett was deeply affected by the incident.—Virginian-Pilot.

FROM BRO. KILBY.

It seems that a transfer of one prominent preacher to the Virginia Conference causes quite a flutter among some of our ministers, doubtless because of the fact that they are so rare. Transfers to and from some Conferences (such as Tennessee, St. Louis, etc.) are so numerous that they scarcely give rise to a passing notice. The action of Epworth church has caused considerable comment, and no doubt there are some who think that the officials of this church are the greatest of sinners, having committed, as they think, the unpardonable sin; but the fact is they have done nothing unusual or anomalous. Our preachers ought to know, if they don't, that transfers almost innumerable of a similar character take place annually as the necessities or exigencies of the cases demand. The officials of Epworth church, over thirty in number, were unanimous in their action, and did what they thought best under the circumstances for the advancement of Christ's cause at this place. They have no apology to make for their acts nor feel that they have done an injustice to any one. In their opinion the man best suited for the church at this time, considering all the circumstances, was not available in the Virginia Conference, and in making the choice they did there was no reflection whatever on our ministers. They, however, believe in connectionalism in its broadest sense, and do not feel that it should be circumscribed by Conference boundaries. It is evident that our Bishops are of like mind, as they have been using the transfer power judiciously with a view of strengthening and maintaining the highest standard at all important and strategic points in Methodism. This is right and proper; for prominent churches in our cities of other denominations have the right to select from the whole country, and if Methodism is to keep pace with religious progress our prominent churches must be properly cared for. A certain presiding elder has been quoted as saying that there were twenty ministers in the Virginia Conference capable of filling Epworth's pulpit. Who is to decide this? The aforesaid presiding elder, the twenty preachers themselves, or the officials of Epworth church? Supposing there are twenty possessing the requisite qualifications, would any one of them consent to go to Epworth if he knew he was neither asked for nor wanted? If the officials of this church, acting in a deliberate way after giving the matter most careful and thoughtful consideration, did not decide to select one of these twenty, then surely no injury has been done them by selecting another. A minister of the Virginia Conference noted for his hard sense, discussing this question with one of the officials of Epworth church, said in effect: "I am very certain that Epworth church don't want me, therefore it is no concern of mine who it gets." Looks as if he got it about right. The fact is, it would be a good thing if there were a number of preachers transferred in and the same number transferred out of Virginia Conference. It would doubtless be the best thing that could happen. We have some preachers who would be benefited by the change, and once out of the ruts and their present environments, they would astonish themselves for the Master. He who reads the signs of the times must see that transfers are going to be more numerous in the future than in the past; so my good brethren of the ministry, suffer an exhortation from one of the obstreperous board and allow him to say that if you feel like making any unkind criticism keep it to yourself and don't look out of the corners of your eyes at a transfer, for who knows but that some Bishop hunting for preachers to put in "giraffe stalls" might put his hand on one of you and say, "Thou art the man," and in that event you would not feel comfortable in another Conference if some one looked cross-eyed at you? The great M. E. Church, South, is big enough to furnish a place for every minister, hence they should not harbor petty jealousies and go around saying unkind and even unchristian things about Epworth church as some of them have done. I'll venture the assertion that that big-hearted old college chum of mine, Dr. John Hannon, will welcome Dr. Smart with open arms. Why? Because dear John has been a transfer. Don't you see, brethren, how it operates? Anything that broadens a man's horizon and makes his heart swell with kindness is a good thing, hence I am in favor of transfers. I think I hear one of Hannon's glorious Amens!

Why should not distilleries be required to obtain a license the same as saloons? An effort will be made to obtain such a law at once.

LETTER FROM REV. J. L. HENDRY, OF CHINA.

Dear Christian Friends,—It gives me pleasure to send you the Church news from this part of the field.

The Huchow circuit now extends twenty-five miles from north to south, and is still bounded on all sides by unoccupied territory. It is mostly newly opened work, having been opened last year, with the exception of San Jao Poo, in the southern part, where work was opened four years ago.

At the village of San Jao Poo we have a church now of one hundred and fifteen members, with a large number of probationers besides. From that point the Gospel has spread in all directions, so that we now have three out-stations, where there are sub-pastors at work. And from these small centres the work is extending into the surrounding towns and villages, many of which are visited regularly by these helpers.

The church at San Jao Poo has, this year, subscribed money for the purpose of opening a school and purchasing a lot. The lot has been paid for, and now we shall have the pleasure of raising the money to build a large church. The city of Huchow is situated in the centre of the circuit, and is the metropolis of a large and highly productive territory. Rice and silk are among the principal products. The work was opened in this city last year, first by the opening of a dispensary, and then later by the opening of two schools—one for boys, under the control of Miss L. Rankin, and the other for girls, under the direction of Miss Coffey. These schools are prospering, and are accomplishing much good. The medical work in this district is now soon to be taken in charge by Dr. Hearn, a brother of Rev. T. A. Hearn, who, with his family, is now en route to China.

The evangelistic work has been pressed from the beginning, and not without results. Several persons have been received into the church this year. Among them was an old lady who was a widow and a devout worshipper of the idols. She had for so long a time and constantly bumped her head before her false gods that a lump had been formed in the middle of her forehead as large as the end of my finger. This she regarded as her badge of devotion. Now it has almost disappeared, and I believe that she has a badge that is the expression of a changed life and heart. Another old lady who was received into the church at the same time has been placed in circumstances where she could show plainly her faith in God. During the summer just passed, while the cholera was carrying away the people by hundreds, this sister was taken violently ill. Her husband and children insisted that the priest should be called to burn incense by her bedside and drive away the devils, so that she might get well. But she told them very positively that she would not permit the priests to come near her, for she had placed her trust in God, who would bless her and restore her to health. And she insisted that they join in their prayers with hers, to the true and living God, for help. Prayer was made, with the result that she was restored, to the amazement of her neighbors.

From this city also the Word was sounded out in all directions, so that we now have a native preacher stationed forty miles away toward the northwest, near the western boundary of this province. There are many other points which are open to us, and only the lack of men and means prevent us from entering them. O, my dear friends, the need on all sides is workers—men and women chosen and sent of God to this people.

Our report will show that this year more than sixty persons have been received by baptism, and besides these we have a large number of probationers on the roll.

In conclusion I would earnestly entreat your prayers in behalf of the work in this district. May the Lord of the harvest send forth more laborers into His harvest!

Your brother, J. L. HENDRY.

PETERSBURG LETTER.

Petersburg, Va., Nov. 24, 1902.

Mr. Editor,—Another Conference year has passed. The resolution of the itinerant wheel has made a few changes in the pastorates hereabouts. West Street, Ettrick, Matoaca and Blandford have new pastors this Conference year.

We will miss Bros. L. W. Guyer, C. F. Comer and L. C. Moore, but we will give cordial welcome to Bros. F. G. Davis, J. D. Forkner, J. W. Eure and S. C. Wright.

Our preachers' meeting was reorganized to-day. Dr. W. G. Starr is our president now. We were glad to have with us to-day Rev. Ernest Stevens, who is a native of this city.

The newly appointed pastors did not show up, as they are doubtless engaged in the preliminaries of moving, etc.

A good work was on the whole done by our pastors last Conference year, as their reports show, but we trust the results this year will be larger and more successful in all respects.

Steps will be taken soon in the way of the visit next spring to our city of Rev. G. R. Stuart, who has promised to conduct his evangelistic services for a number of days. It will be necessary to get a warehouse to hold the services in, as no church building here is adequate to accommodate the crowds likely to attend the services.

The Y. M. C. A. of this city, which has a beautiful and commodious building, have Sunday afternoon services, at which an address is given by some well known speaker. This is a good idea, and the seeds of truth dropped in such promising soil as a young man's heart has promise of good results.

Dr. R. T. Wilson, our presiding elder, expects to start out very soon on the district to meet his engagements. He is hopeful of gracious results on the different charges the present Conference year. It is to be greatly hoped that his spirit will be contagious wherever he goes. A consecrated ministry is a powerful factor in religious work. We believe that a great many of our preachers are consecrated men. In the Methodist Church to-day there is a great deal of spiritual vigor and life.

The Master is still with us. We look for great things this year.

In Blandford Cemetery recently I visited the graves of some of our deceased preachers who sleep there. I counted it a privilege to stand at the grave of Rev. H. B. Cowles, so widely and favorably known in the early days of our Church in Virginia. On the shaft which marks the spot over the cut of the Holy Book are the words: "Faithful unto death. Born November 2, 1803. Henry Brown Cowles, for forty-three years led a useful and honored life in the Master's vineyard, and fell on sleep November 28, 1874." The lines, "Servant of God, well done," etc., are appropriately carved on the shaft.

I saw the grave of Rev. Wm. C. Blount also. For eighteen years he labored in the vineyard of the Master, and died aged forty-seven years. The dust of that greatly gifted man, Rev. C. H. Hall, of our Conference, who was the beloved pastor of Washington Street church, sleeps in beautiful Blandford. He fell in the prime of life, being only forty-one years of age when he laid his armor by.

Rev. Edward Portlock Wilson, of our Conference, who died in Hampton, Va., in 1895, is buried in Blandford. Born in 1822 and entering the Virginia Conference in 1842, Bro. Wilson's career as an itinerant extended over quite a period of time. He was a gifted preacher. In this section his name is as ointment poured forth. E. P. P.

OBITUARY.

Died, in Richmond, Va., November 7, 1902, Mary Crowder Cleaton, in the fortieth year of her age. She was not afraid to die. Just before she passed away she said to her nurse: "I am dying, but I am ready." We laid her to rest in the churchyard that she loved so well. Why she has been taken we cannot tell. We can only say it is God's will and it must be well. Sometime, somewhere, we will understand.

A FRIEND.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At the last meeting of our societies, the Parsonage Aid and Missionary, of Grace church, wishing to express the deep grief we feel, appointed a committee to draft resolutions in memory of one of our most honored and loved members, Mrs. Lucie McGeehee Clarke, who, surrounded by her sorrowing family and loving friends, fell asleep in Jesus on October 2, 1902, at 10 A. M.

Resolved, That while we mourn her loss, we rejoice to have known and have associated with such a lovely Christian life and character. We rejoice that it was our privilege to see how patiently and beautifully one can be enabled to endure such great afflictions of the body and murmur not; for in all her years of suffering no murmuring moved her soul or escaped her life, but with calmness known only to the Christian she humbly met each day, ever brighter, if possible, for the chastening of the previous one.

Resolved, That in her death the societies have lost a faithful member, her friends and neighbors one they loved, her church one devoted to her interests always, her pastor a friend in whom he could and did trust, her husband a truly devoted wife, and her children the loveliest of mothers.

Resolved, That we tender the family our deepest, most heartfelt sympathies in this sore bereavement, and pray our kind Father to soothe their heartaches and keep them in the way she so beautifully trained them, and finally gather all in His "home beyond the skies."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Southern Methodist Recorder, one to the family, and one be spread upon the minutes of our societies.

The matter of school trustees is one of great importance. Nepotism and favoritism are the two curses which attach to this office. They must be gotten rid of or there is little prospect of much improvement.—Richard McIlwaine, Chairman Committee on Education, Virginia Constitutional Convention.

PLANS FOR SCHOOL HOUSES. Every State Should Issue Such a Document.

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction has just completed arrangements with Messrs. Barrett & Thompson, architects, for the preparation of five plans for public school houses of one, two, three and four rooms. There will be two plans for the four-room house, one for a single story, and the other for a two-story house. Accompanying each plan will be a full bill of materials and specifications. These plans, together with the bill of materials and specifications, will be published in a bulletin on Improvement of School Houses and Grounds, to be issued from the office of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction within the next month or two. They will also be published in the next report of the State Superintendent.

The cost of these houses will range from $250 to $1,500. So far as possible they are to be constructed in accordance with the most modern principles of light, heating and ventilation, with a due regard to beauty of architecture and the greatest possible economy. There is no doubt that they will prove of great service and will result in marked improvement in the comfort, beauty and convenience of the public school houses of the State.—Raleigh, N. C., News and Observer.

Do we believe in industrial education? As profoundly as we believe that men must work, so profoundly do we believe that they should prepare to work intelligently.—Biblical Recorder.

It is reported that General Miles, on being asked if he were a "total abstinence man," thoughtfully replied: "I was not always; but I have a grown-up son, and he will drink if I do." In these few words of the great lieutenant-general there is a most important hint for fathers who are rearing sons on which they dote. Those boys will, in nearly all cases, adopt the social customs and form the habits of their fathers.—Religious Telescope,

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON X, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 7.

Text of the Lesson, Ruth 1, 16-22.
Memory Verses, 16, 17—Golden Text,
Rom. xii, 10—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]
16. And Ruth said: Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go: and where thou lodgest I will lodge. Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God.

This and the next verse give the declaration of Ruth concerning her determination to cling to the God and people of Naomi. It is somewhat paralleled by the declaration of Ittai to David in II Sam. xv, 21, "As the Lord liveth and as my lord the king liveth surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be." That these words should be the utterances of gentiles to Jews is all the more interesting. The whole of this book of Ruth, written by the Spirit of God, as were all other portions of the Bible, is a beautiful and most attractive setting forth of the story of the kingdom when those who are now the weary gleaners shall possess the field (the world, Matt. xiii, 38), having become the bride of Him who owns the field, our kinsman Redeemer, the mighty man of wealth. Every name and incident in the book is most suggestive and has an inexhaustible mine of wealth for anointed eyes and ears. Having but one brief lesson in it, we can only hint at the riches herein.

18, 19. When she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, then she left, speaking unto her. So they two went until they came to Bethlehem.

We are reminded of the way Elisha clung to Elijah and how "they two went on," "they two stood by Jordan," "they two went over on dry ground" (II Kings ii, 1-15). We think also of Barnabas, who exhorted the believers at Antioch to cleave unto the Lord with purpose of heart, and of Stephen, who looked up steadfastly into heaven and saw the glory of God and Jesus (Acts xi, 23; vii, 55). It is this that we so much need, this cleaving to the Lord, this steadfastness, this seeing only and always God and Jesus. In the last lesson it was the Lord and Gideon. May it ever be in the case of each of us "my Lord and I," for "the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him" (II Chron. xvi, 9). In I Cor. xv, 58, we are exhorted to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

20. And she said unto them: Call me not Naomi. Call me Mara, for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.

As her townspeople looked upon her after her ten years' absence (verse 4) they said, Is this Naomi? And thus she replied to them. As one has said, She blamed the Almighty when all He did was graciously to bring her home again. For her troubles she had no one to blame but herself. It is good that Moab proves a Mara to the wanderer, else the wanderers might like to die and be buried there. Almighty is El-shaddai, the mighty God who is all sufficient (Gen. xvii, 1), and had they known Him as they should they would never have left Bethlehem to sojourn in Moab. When the Lord allows bitterness to come to His people, it is always to win them back to Himself. "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept thy word" (Ps. cxix, 67).

21. I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty.

She is right this time. I went out; the Lord brought me home. The sheep wandered, but the Shepherd sought and found. Wandering always costs us dear. If any who read have wandered, let them return quickly, for He cries, Return, thou backsliding Israel, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you (Jer. iii, 12). Before we can know His fullness we must learn our emptiness. The name "Almighty" is found more times in the book of Job than in all the rest of the Bible, and it was only after Job was thoroughly emptied of himself that he was filled as never before (Job xlii, 5-17). It was after the disciples confessed that they had nothing with which to feed the 5,000 that the Lord abundantly filled them all with the lad's loaves and fishes, and it was after the disciples confessed that they had taken nothing, though they had toiled all night, that He sent to their nets 153 great fishes.

22. So Naomi returned and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, * * * and they came to Bethlehem in the beginning of barley harvest.

The Moabites came from drunkenness and crime. Bethlehem suggests God's house of bread. It is better far to come from Moab to Bethlehem than to go from Bethlehem to Moab. If any have in the least degree wandered from God, let all such return quickly and whole heartedly to Him and henceforth follow fully, making the words of Ruth in verse 16 their hearts' motto. In addition to all the precious and comforting words of this book, such as are found in ii, 12, 16; iii, 11, 18, etc., the book is most important as showing the ancestry of David, whose throne the Lord Jesus is yet to establish and occupy at Jerusalem (Isa. ix, 7; Luke i, 32, 33). The title, "Son of David," is the first and one of the last given to Christ in the New Testament (Matt. i, 1; Rev. xxii, 16), and Ruth is one of the four women mentioned in His genealogy in the first chapter of Matthew. Known unto God are all His works from the foundation of the world. All purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord and sure of fulfillment, for every purpose of the Lord shall be performed, both for His people and against His enemies (Acts xv, 18; Eph. iii, 11; 1 Cor. ii, 9).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 7, "The Missionary Uprising of the Young People"—Text, Acts ii, 17, 18, 21; I Tim. iv, 12-16.

"Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example to them that believe."

It too often occurs that people are ashamed of something in early life. Foolish things are done in carelessness or a spirit of independence and bravado and afterward bitterly repented when the inevitable sting comes. It is not necessary to sow wild oats. Nothing in our nature makes it compulsory. Nothing can make it right. Many never do it. Their tribe is increasing. A multitude, greater than ever before, of the young people are coming forward to places of prominence and power and are doing work of which they shall never be ashamed. Those who see them now and those who shall in coming time see what they accomplish shall applaud and not despise.

Though long experience and age may be needful to bring mature wisdom, it is yet a fact that no one has to live many years to get enough knowledge to go safely if he desires it. Youth is not by any means the age of foolishness, though it is a period of abounding life, and because so many ways open and none has been fully explored and some are very attractive and there are curiosity and longing to know what each will lead to dangers and risks are met and taken which might have been shunned.

It is in young life that God gives the spirit of prophecy if it ever comes to one at all. This is the time when the realities of life begin to loom up large and the mighty problems of existence and all the mystery of right and wrong and ideals of duty and visions of the perfect and beautiful unfold themselves before the awakening soul. The spirit begins to realize its own nature as above the earthly and to struggle for its birthright and strive for speech.

The church of Jesus Christ is recognizing increasingly the possibilities open to her young people if they are God filled and God led.

If the world is ever evangelized, it will be done by those young in years. That sounds like a rash statement, but the more fully it is studied the more fully its soberness appears.

Young people free from family cares can go among heathen people, endure privations, apply themselves more vigorously, adapt themselves to circumstances more fully and quickly than older persons incumbered with children. Languages must usually be acquired in early years or they will never be mastered efficiently. Physical endurance, mental alertness, spiritual enthusiasm, are all at their best in early years, and these make much for success in the work of Christ's kingdom.

One of the most hopeful signs of the times is the great forward movement among young Christians of all denominations in missionary work. The best talent of the church is offering itself for this aggressive work in winning the world to Christ. Whether those entering the ministry in the home land are as well equipped and as highly talented as those entering business life, it is certain that in the foreign work God is getting the best. The brainiest and brawnier of the great colleges, the purest and most Christlike, are the standard bearers there.

The Gate of Prayer.

The gate of prayer is an important gate in Zion. "My house shall be called a house of prayer," is God's own word. The prayer gate should give us entrance every day to God's inner temple. What burdens do we bring through this gate! What blessings do we carry away! To forsake this gate of Zion is to face a world without strength. In the early morning run into this gate of prayer for strength. At evening return with gratitude.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Difference.

One who had spent her life in weeping, mourning her lot as hardest to be borne, sighing that others' lives were easy, paying no heed to any but self, when asked what most she craved in heaven replied, "A place to laugh." And one who bravely bore her burdens, upright and smiling, thinking but little of her woe, but helping every suffering mortal, when asked, "What most do you desire in heaven?" replied, "A place to weep."—Christian Register.

A Good Wisher.

Benevolence is a universal possibility. The poorest can wish his fellow well. A good wisher is never a bad man. He may err, but his errors are those of judgment. His heart is never out of place. Envy has no part in his nature. Slander and calumny are foreign to his Disposition.—Presbyterian Journal.

Civilization and Christianity.

That civilization has reacted on Christianity is palpably true, but it is not one whit more true than the fact that Christianity has woven itself into the very fiber of the civilization whose triumphs it has so immeasurably increased.—New York Tribune.

'Tis Good to Live!

'Tis good to live! If but to learn,
Although I'm weak, my friend is strong
And many a minor tone it takes To swell the chords for one grand song

'Tis good to live! If but to hear
A tuneful voice, homesick for heaven,
Or read a glowing prophecy
The poet to the world has given.

'Tis good to live! If but to love
All brave, true women, tender men;
To know a doubter may find faith
Through some pure heaven of eyes again.

'Tis good to live! If but to dream
That even in the city street,
Above the highest building's top,
God's answer and my prayer will meet.
—Congregationalist.

CHILEAN LIQUOR LAW

Some Clauses That Will Encourage Lovers of Temperance.

The Chilean liquor law, which has recently gone into effect, has several points worth studying elsewhere, says a writer in the Union Signal. While not strictly prohibitive, it is boldly and rigidly restrictive. Dramshop licenses are offered for sale every three years to the highest bidder, but none may be granted within 200 yards of any school, church, charitable institution or military barracks. No liquors may be sold in any theater or similar place of amusement or in any railway station or on any railway train or to minors or between midnight and 6 in the morning.

The Chilean law, in order to guard against the political influences of the saloon, forbids any public official whatsoever to hold or be in any way interested in any liquor license. If a Chilean liquor dealer wants to hold public office, he must first change his occupation, or if a public official wants to become a liquor dealer he must quit his office.

The Chilean new liquor law, moreover, recognizes fully the principle of local option. This extends not merely to cities, but to city wards. The people of any section of a city may vote to create a prohibition district and absolutely exclude the saloon from the neighborhood of their homes. This is a great point gained. The right of local ward prohibition in our own cities is a point that should be vigorously pressed in our own country whenever the larger and better prohibition does not obtain.

While the provisions of this Chilean liquor legislation are strikingly thorough, it is in the very nature of the saloon business to evade law and resist restriction. We do not feel that the new Chilean law is Utopian in any sense, but it is interesting to read a law which is evidently intended to be enforced. This feature of it we heartily commend.

OSCAR ON TEMPERANCE.

Sweden's King Expresses Himself in No Uncertain Terms.

Rev. Francis E. Clark recently had an interview with King Oscar II. of Sweden and Norway in regard to the effort that is being made by "the native races deputation" to prevent the sale of opium and intoxicating beverages to aboriginal tribes and uncivilized races. In speaking of this interview, Dr. Clark says:

After conversing on various subjects for a little time the king asked me concerning the progress of the Christian Endeavor movement in America and Europe, and then we approached the special object of the interview—the prohibition of opium and alcoholic liquors to the uncivilized races. I told him of the awful havoc wrought in the south sea islands, where the work of Dr. Paton and his fellow laborers has been almost undone by a few unprincipled traders, who have supplied them with liquor and firearms.

I told him also of a recent visit to our secretary of state, Mr. Hay, in Washington a few weeks before, with the rest of the deputation, and of the assurances given by Mr. Hay that our government would take the matter up, with the other nations concerned, and of his hopes of complete ultimate success.

The king heard me most patiently and kindly and gave every possible token of his interest and sympathy with the effort. In regard to the whole matter of liquor legislation he talked freely and earnestly. "I have done all I can," he said, "to keep alcohol away from the Lapps in my own domain, and it is absolutely prohibited in Lapland. Ours is a free country," he went on to say, "and my subjects must regulate their own affairs, but things are much better than they used to be.

"When I was a young man, we all got tipsy," he continued, a statement which he immediately qualified by saying, "I do not mean that I did personally, but that was the common custom, while now drunkenness is comparatively rare."

This last statement my own observation bore out, for during several weeks in Sweden, most of the time spent in the larger cities and towns, I saw but one intoxicated man.

When I asked the king if I could assure the deputation and the American public of his sympathy with this effort to keep the vices of civilization from the uncivilized, he replied with great earnestness: "Certainly, certainly. I most heartily sympathize with it."

What Women Tipplers Drink.

Right Rev. Leighton Coleman, Episcopal bishop of Delaware, who started his hearers in a mission address at New Brunswick, N. J., by the statement that there is an alarming increase of intemperance among women, along with a decrease of intemperance among men, has repeated the statement. After he made it committees of impartial citizens went to the various fashionable hotels and women's restaurants, taking notes of the orders of women patrons. They found that to take wines, cordials, even whisky, with meals was an almost invariable rule among the wealthy and fashionable set. Not only this, but in so called tea-rooms intoxicants were served to women, who ordered them without even the pretense of ordering a meal. Among the middle class of women the evil is extending in other forms.

Novel Way to Fight Rum.

A new and practical arrangement for providing masons and other building laborers, coachmen, errand boys, policemen and others with cheap food and nonalcoholic drinks has been called into being by the Berlin section of the German Society For Popular Hygiene. At stated hours special carts pass through the streets and dispense sandwiches, bread and butter, the sausages so dear to the German palate, tea, cocoa, coffee and soup, all at the lowest possible prices.

Novel Suit at Law.

Mrs. Flora E. MacEnally, Lansing, Mich., has sued Edward H. Dakin, a saloon keeper, for $20,000 damages for selling liquor to her husband. She alleges that her husband's life has been ruined, his character destroyed, and she has been robbed of her support. Mr. MacEnally was a respectable man, formerly a justice of the peace.

The local Anti-Saloon League of Louisa C. H. holds regular monthly meetings. At its recent election of new officers short speeches were made by local pastors and others, and a committee was appointed to arrange a public programme meeting to be held in the Christian church, Tuesday, December 9th. But some one neglected to send us the names of those newly elected officers.

The Union Central LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

THE MANN BILL.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That section five of chapter two of an act approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety, entitled an act to provide for the assessment of taxes on persons, property and incomes, and on licenses to transact business, and imposing taxes thereon for the support of the government and public free schools, and to pay interest on the public debt, and prescribing the mode of obtaining licenses to sell wine, ardent spirits, malt liquors, or any mixture thereof, in cases where a court certificate is required, as amended and re-enacted by an act approved March fourth, eighteen hundred and ninety, as amended and re-enacted by an act approved March fourth, eighteen hundred and ninety-six, as amended and re-enacted by an act approved March seventh, nineteen hundred, be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

Sec. 5. When such application has been endorsed by the commissioner of the revenue "referred to the corporation court of the city of _____," as the case may be, the applicant shall present the application so endorsed to the corporation or hustings court whose certificate is required, and said court shall thereupon hear such evidence as may be introduced for or against the application, and hear and determine the question of granting the same. It shall be lawful for any person who may consider that he would be aggrieved by granting such license to have himself entered and made a party defendant to said application and to defend and contest the same. If the court be fully satisfied, upon the hearing of the testimony for and against the application, that the applicant is a fit person to conduct such business, and that he will keep an orderly house, and that the place at which it is to be conducted is a suitable, convenient and appropriate place for conducting such a business, the court may, upon the execution by the applicant of bond in the penalty of not less than two hundred and fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, with good security, conditioned for faithful compliance with all the requirements of this act, grant such license; and thereupon the commissioner of the revenue shall issue the same in such form as may be prescribed by the auditor of public accounts. In case an application is refused by the court, the applicant shall have refunded to him by the treasurer or other collecting officer the amount of money deposited by him. When such application has been endorsed by the commissioner of the revenue "referred to the county court of _____ county," until February first, nineteen hundred and four, and after that time it has been endorsed "referred to the circuit court of _____ county," the applicant shall present the application so endorsed to the court whose certificate is required, and said court shall thereupon hear such evidence as may be introduced for or against the application, and hear and determine the question of granting the same; provided, however, that before any application for a license to sell by retail or to keep a malt liquor saloon, or an ordinary, shall be presented to any county court, before the first of February, nineteen hundred and four, or to the circuit court after that time, the applicant shall, in addition to complying with all the other requirements of this act, first advertise his intention of making such application by posting a written notice of such intention at the front door of the court-house of the county in which the business is proposed to be conducted, and also at the place where it is proposed to conduct the said business for thirty days next preceding the day on which such application shall be presented to the said county court before the first of February, nineteen hundred and four, or to the circuit court after that time, and no court shall consider any such application until it shall have been first proved to its satisfaction that the notice required by this section has been so posted. It shall be lawful for any person who may consider that he would be aggrieved by the granting of such license to have himself entered and made a party defendant to said application and to defend and contest the same. If the court be fully satisfied upon the hearing of the testimony for and against the application that the applicant is a fit person to conduct such business, and that he will personally attend to the same, and will keep an orderly house, and that the place at which it is to be conducted is a suitable, convenient and appropriate place for conducting such a business, and one at which police protection is afforded, and if it shall further plainly appear to the satisfaction of the court that a majority of the qualified voters of the district or town in which the privilege is sought to be exercised are in favor of the application, that the sale of ardent spirits at that place will not be contrary to a sound public policy or injurious to the morals or the material interest of the community, the court may, upon the execution by the applicant of bond in the penalty of not less than two hundred and fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, with security conditioned for the faithful compliance with all the requirements of this act, grant such license; and thereupon the commissioner of

NOTICE.

The district stewards meeting of the Lynchburg District will be held December 10th, at 12 o'clock M., at Centenary church, Lynchburg. A full attendance is requested. J. C. REED, P. E.
November 29, 1902.

The meeting of the Methodist Ministers' conference yesterday was largely attended. Rev. W. A. Cooper, of St. James, and Rev. J. B. Askew, of Highland Park, were present. They have just assumed charge of their respective churches.

Rev. J. S. Wallace, formerly of Denby Street, Fulton, but now of Bethany, was a visitor.

A resolution was adopted that ministers in reporting their Sunday work to the conference shall give their text and topic, and that any minister desiring it shall be furnished an outline of their discourse.—Dispatch.

The inclement weather of Sunday did not prevent the people of St. James Methodist church according their new pastor, Rev. W. A. Cooper, a warm and sincere welcome.

At the morning service the building was crowded, and at night the congregation was much larger than anticipated.

The sermons of Mr. Cooper, while not of an oratorical character, were such as to enchain the attention of his hearers, and were characterized by earnestness and force. The speaker impressed all as a man with the ability to influence those within as well as those outside the church. The sermon at night was of such a high order that the board of stewards has requested its repetition next Sunday morning.—Dispatch.

The congregation of the Wesley Methodist Episcopal church, of which Rev. J. A. Thomas is the pastor, expect to move into their handsome new edifice, on Fairfax street, next Sunday week. During the building of the church the congregation has been worshipping in the Episcopal Mission church, on the same street. The new Wesley church stands on the site of the old one, but is much more commodious and conveniently arranged. The congregation is rapidly growing in numbers and influence, and the members have shown great activity in building the church and maintaining its work.—Dispatch.

The large crowd in attendance at the morning service of Memorial M. E. church Sunday evidenced the much pleasure and gratification with which the return of Rev. W. A. Christian was greeted.

The subject of his discourse was "What Think Ye of Christ," and was handled in a most able and impressive manner. Much interest was manifested. Owing to the inclement weather the special sermon to have been preached at the evening service was postponed until next Sunday night. Instead of that Rev. Christian used for a subject, "To Be Carnally Minded is Death; to be Spiritually Minded is Life and Peace," which he handled very ably. The congregation was quite large considering the state of the weather.—Virginian-Pilot.

Rev. George R. Stuart, the evangelist, closed his meetings in Monumental M. E. church Sunday night after a most successful series running through ten days, and it is thought that the number who professed conversion will reach nearly 200. Every service has been largely attended and much interest manifested and deep impressions made. Sunday Rev. Mr. Stuart preached four times. The first sermon was to the Sunday school children, and at 11 o'clock the regular services were held. Again at 4 o'clock he preached to a large congregation and closed with services at 7:45 P. M. There were professions at every service, and much good is expected from the visit of the gifted minister to this city.

Mr. Stuart left here yesterday morning for Columbus, Ohio, where he begins a series of meetings to-night to last ten days. He will then go to his home in Nashville, Tenn., to spend Christmas, and the first of the year goes to Mexico to preach.—Landmark.

NEW METHODIST PREACHERS.

The announcement that the three new Methodist preachers appointed by Bishop Duncan at the late session of the Virginia Conference would occupy their respective pulpits Sunday very naturally attracted large congregations to hear them.

At Epworth church, to which Rev. Dr. R. D. Smart, late of St. Louis, had been assigned, a very large congregation gathered Sunday morning eager to see and hear the new preacher, who for the first time in his ministry of many years serves as pastor a church in the Virginia Conference. The reputation that preceded Dr. Smart as a preacher of great learning and pulpit ability was fully borne out by his two initial sermons. In the morning he preached a strong sermon on parental instruction, taking as his text Deuteronomy 6: 6-7: "And these words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children."

At night about 250 people braved the storm of rain and heard the doctor on the subject,

"RUTH'S FIDELITY."

Text, first chapter of Ruth and sixteenth verse, "And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

The distinguished divine spoke substantially as follows:

These are the words of a pious resolution on the part of a young widow whose life forms an interesting chapter in Biblical biography. It was the turning point in her history, the crisis of her life; and it may be interesting before considering the resolution itself to notice somewhat in detail the circumstances connected with it, and leading up to it: There had been a famine in the land of Palestine, caused doubtless by some predatory incursion of the Gibeonites. It waxed sore, even in the town of Bethlehem, though that word means 'the house of bread,' and was given to it because of the productiveness of the surrounding soil. There lived in this town a man of prominence and wealth. Elimelech was his name, and the name of his wife was Naomi. Elimelech concluded to leave Bethlehem and sojourn in the land of Moab, which lay on the other side of the Dead Sea, until the famine had passed off.

Accordingly, he and his wife and their two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, left Bethlehem, and going north until they could conveniently cross the Jordan and then south again on the other side, came at last by a circuitous route to the land of Moab, where they found food for themselves and their cattle, and they were satisfied. However, there is no place on this earth where happiness, uninterrupted and unalloyed, may be found, and how often do we, in fleeing from evils of one kind rush blindly upon new and unexpected sorrow! Thus it was in this instance. Elimelech, not acclimated to the low plains of Moab, soon sickened and died, and Naomi is left a bereaved widow in a strange land and among heathen people, who knew not Israel's God. However, light and shadow, joy and sorrow, life and death often follow each other in close succession. It was not long before Naomi's two sons married two Moabitish women, Orpah and Ruth, and brought them to live with their mother, so that Naomi's loneliness was relieved, and her grief lightened by the presence of her daughters-in-law. But the shadows thickened again, for it was not a great while before both her sons died also, and Naomi's grief was now too heavy to be borne. The land where she had met such sore afflictions fails any longer to attract her, and her thoughts and her heart go out longingly towards her own native Bethlehem. Hearing that the famine had disappeared from the land she resolved to return, and her daughters-in-law concluded to go with her. With sad hearts these three widow women turned their backs upon the last resting place of their earthly hopes, and unprotected and alone began their tedious journey towards Bethlehem.

They had gone some distance when, as we may well suppose, they sat themselves down under some inviting shade-tree by the roadside to rest. Fatigued by the journey, the younger women fell asleep, but Naomi's thoughts were doubtless busy contrasting the circumstances under which she was returning to Bethlehem with those under which she left it. Then she had a husband, upon whose arm she leaned; two sons, the pride of her heart and the anticipated stay of her old age, and wealth in great abundance. Now, bereft of all these, she was plodding her way back on foot, broken in spirit as well as in fortune and not knowing what hardships were yet before her to be met. Distressed by this last thought, she aroused her daughters from their slumbers and told them they had better return to their own country and kindred, where they would be well cared for, for the future to her was dark and unpromising. She once had friends in Bethlehem, but that was revenue shall issue the same in such form as may be prescribed by the auditor of public accounts. But if the court shall not be fully satisfied that all of the requirements of this act have been complied with, it shall refuse to grant the license. Either party to such application shall, until the first of February, nineteen hundred and four, have the right to appeal from the order of judgment of the county court granting or refusing such application during the term at which the application is heard to the circuit court of said county. The judge of such circuit court shall take cognizance of such appeal, and may hear the same either in term time or in vacation. And if he shall be clearly of opinion that all the requirements of this act have been fully complied with, may grant the license upon the terms herein prescribed; but if such requirements have not been fully complied with, he shall refuse the same, and the decision of such circuit court, or of the judge thereof in vacation, shall be final, and no appeal, writ of error, or supersedeas shall lie thereto. And after February first, nineteen hundred and four, there shall be no appeal from the order of the circuit court on such application. The party of any such proceeding who shall substantially prevail shall, in cases where such applications are contested, be entitled to recover their costs from the opposite parties as in other civil cases. All bonds taken under chapter two of this act shall contain the waiver of the homestead exemption of the obligators therein. In case an application be finally refused by the court, the applicant shall have refunded to him by the treasurer or other collecting officer the amount of money deposited by him.

2. By reason of the facts set forth herein this is an emergency act, and shall be in force from its passage.

FROM BRO. ROYALL.

Dear Brother,—After this week I shall be at my home in Reidsville, N. C., forty minutes south of Danville by Southern Railway, where I will dwell in my own house. I shall soon be ready to begin my work. By permission of the Board, I will accept some invitations to engage in revival work during the winter, and I shall be glad to correspond with any that desire help. I will also, now and then, give my lecture on "Life in the Far East." I have already visited one point and given three addresses on missions. I shall be glad to be kept busy.

Faternally, W. W. ROYALL.

A very interesting meeting of Lee Cook Y. W. C. T. U., of Richmond, has recently been held at the home of the president, Mrs. L. Wall. The most important feature of the meeting was a talk by Mrs. Wall giving an account of her trip to the recent National W. C. T. U. Convention in Portland, Me. She gave a beautiful description of the reception to Lady Henry Somerset, of England. Mrs. Wall's description of the improved conditions in Portland, now that the prohibitory law has been enforced there for several years, was exceedingly interesting and instructive.

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago

Chicago. In this discourse Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage shows how the qualities which characterize a successful fisherman may be utilized in Christian work. The text is Matthew iv, 19, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."

Are you a fisherman? "Oh, yes," you answer; "I have been a fisherman all my life. As Izaak Walton, the father of angling, used to say that true fishermen, like poets, were born, not made, so I was born with a love for the rod and the reel. As a little boy, many and many a time I have been late for school because I loitered on the way under the shadow of the old wooden bridge to cast a crooked pin used for a hook. Now that I am grown I love to go back to the scene where I was born. I love to wade in the old familiar brook and catch the speckled trout. I love to take a boat and pull out into the river which flows through the valley where my father is buried and try to coax to my hook the black bass and the timid perch."

No, my friend, you are not a true fisherman. A true fisherman is one whose life employment, not his summer vacation, is devoted to catching fish. You are no more a fisherman than William M. Evarts was a farmer. Mr. Evarts for recreation used to play at farming. He used to take the money which he made as a lawyer in New York city and put it into his Vermont farm. But Mr. Evarts never made a living off his Vermont farm. Farming was such an expensive luxury to him that one day while he was entertaining some fellow senators at his farm he offered them in one hand a glass of milk and in the other a glass of champagne as he said, "Take your choice, gentlemen; they both cost me the same."

There is just as much difference between the man who makes his living by fishing and one who fishes for sport as there is between the man who farms to make a living and the man who farms for recreation. It is the difference between work and play. It is the difference between the man who sets sail in the fishing smack from Nantucket or New Bedford and spends six long months off the banks of Newfoundland, facing the dangers of tempest and collision, and the man who paddles about in a canoe on a quiet stream. It is the difference between the man who is ready to defy the dangers of Lake Galilee—the most treacherous inland sea in the world—and the man who stands upon a rock on a sunshiny afternoon and casts his expensive line into the brook for a few hours' pastime.

The Fishermen of Galilee.

Now, the two brothers, Peter and Andrew, to whom Christ spoke the words of my text upon the shores of Lake Galilee, were real fishermen. They were not dilettanti. They did not go out into the country for a few days with a hundred dollar pole to catch a dollar's worth of fish; but they made fishing their life's business. They belonged to what is perhaps the bravest class of men on earth—the fishermen. Christ when he saw them mending their nets, turned and said: "Come, leave your nets and follow me. Give up your work of catching fish and I will teach you how you may use your energy and bravery and consecration and will make you fishers of men. Come with me and I will make you fishers in the great troubled sea of humanity and will call you my gospel fishermen."

The true gospel fisherman is a one purposed man, whose life is dedicated to the single object of saving souls. Every sportsman knows that it is an impossibility for a successful fisherman to think of anything else but his fish at the time of fishing. He cannot plan about business and attend to his line. He cannot read a book and watch his bait. He cannot dream of the woods and troll at the same time. When a real fisherman fishes, he concentrates his entire attention upon his fishing and excludes every other thought from his brain. Because fishing is so fascinating and absorbing, some of the greatest men of the world have found their recreation in the sport. Daniel Webster, whom the Massachusetts fishermen used to call Black Dan because he became so sunburned when fishing with Sargent S. Prentiss off the shoals of Nantucket, used to forget his senatorial cares in watching his line. Christopher North, the intellectual giant of old Scotland, prolonged his life far into the eighties by his habit of running away from Edinburgh with his rod and reel. Chester A. Arthur and Grover Cleveland at every opportunity would exchange the comforts of the stately White House for the absorbing delight of baiting a hook and casting a line.

So a man cannot become a true gospel fisherman unless he consecrates himself, body and mind and soul, to the one purpose of saving men. He must live and eat and breathe and sleep only for the hope of bringing sinful men and women to Christ. He must be as deeply absorbed in the work of saving souls as was John Knox, who used to arise frequently in the middle of the night to pray. And one night, while he was pleading with God to help him in the work of saving souls, his wife chided him and told him to come back to bed. The great reformer turned and said, "Woman, how can I sleep when my country is not saved?" Then he continued his supplications with this earnest cry: "O God, give me Scotland or I die!"

Put Your Mind Into the Work.

Never was I more impressed with the thought that in order to be a true gospel fisherman a man must surrender himself, body, mind and soul, to the Master's service than when some years ago I went with a party of gentlemen fishing for Atlantic flounders. At that time I was not much of a fisherman. I was so absorbed in the beauties of nature that when I threw out my line I would forget all about it, and the fish would come and nibble off the bait and swim away. In the meantime I was admiring the curving waves; I was watching the winds pile up the clouds into valleys and mountains and domes and arches and fortresses and obelisks; I was watching the sea gulls take their morning baths or swoop down to clutch a fish in their talons, and then with a wild cry start away for the nests where their young were clamoring for food. And as I watched those sea gulls my mind wandered on, and I soliloquized: "What if death had slain my father and mother when I was young just as a cruel marksman for mere sport might shoot yonder bird? Would I then have died as the bird fledglings would die of starvation, or would I have lived to grow up a Christian man or have fallen into crime and finally been put behind iron bars as a convict?" And thus I dreamed the whole day away and only caught one small fish! But right along side of me was a man who had the same kind of bait, the same kind of line and practically the same position. He differed from me only in the fact that he put his whole body and mind into his work. He did not go down New York harbor to watch the clouds or the birds or the waves. He went to fish, and he fished until the perspiration rolled off his face in streams; he fished until his hands were dirty and till his clothes were dirty. He fished until he forgot everything but his line. But the result of putting his whole force into his work was a basketful of at least fifty or sixty big flounders. So, my brother, if you and I are to become one purposed Christians, if we want to live to save men, we must surrender ourselves, body, mind and soul, to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. We must leave our worldly nets down by the shores of Lake Galilee and follow him. Jesus demands that we make his service a life's consecration, not a Sabbath's recreation. He demands unceasing toil, not a summer's sport.

The True Gospel Fisherman.

The true gospel fisherman is a brave man. We have been taught to regard the soldier as among the bravest of men. True, it needs a brave heart to stand unblanched amid a storm of shot and shell and to walk up to the cannon's mouth when the bullets are falling around like hail pattering upon the pavements. But the soldier never has to face great dangers continuously like those the fisherman has to meet. I suppose that among all the different classes of men there is not one among which the destruction of life proportionately is so great as among the men who make the harvest of the sea their avocation or life work.

During a recent journey across the Atlantic and after we had been out a couple of days from New York harbor I saw two men pointing to a dark cloud ahead. I heard one of them say: "We are going to have a bad night. That is the Newfoundland fog bank." Soon the thick mists began to settle around us. All that night the gloomy fog horn blew. I said to the commander of the Cunarder: "Captain, why do you blow that terrific fog horn? Surely the danger of collision with a passing steamer is comparatively small." "Ah," answered the captain, "we are blowing the fog horn chiefly to warn the fishermen. All about these waters are hundreds of little fishing smacks. The fishermen come here and anchor. They stay month in and month out until they catch their cargo, and scores and scores of these poor fellows are run down every year. We want to warn them, if possible, that we are coming along." Go to any of the little fishing towns along the rocky coasts of old Scotland. There you will find women who have lost fathers and brothers and husbands and sons in the awful dangers of a fisherman's life. Every seaman will tell you that the perils of a sailor's life are comparatively nothing if there are only sixty fathoms of water under the ship's keel. But the fisherman rarely puts out to the deep sea. He must fish comparatively near the shore. Then the storms come up and threaten to drive the frail craft upon the rocks. Then the fogs settle so thickly that the steersman can hardly see the prow of the boat from the stern. Yes, the true fisherman's life, whether it is found on Lake Galilee or off the coasts of Scotland or in the Newfoundland fogs, is a life of overwhelming danger. Brave must be the man who would follow so perilous an avocation.

So the gospel fishermen, too, must be brave men! They must be as courageous as were Peter and Andrew, who, to become gospel fishermen, laid down their lives for Christ. They must be as brave as the heroic Father Damien, who in order to minister to the sick and the dying went to Molokai, the Leper island of the Pacific, and himself became a leper and died. They must be as brave as that Salvation Army girl who stands and sings and prays upon the street corner amid the scoffs and the ridicule of the passers-by and who penetrates the dark alleys, humanly unprotected, to seek out souls for Christ. They have to be as brave as that young Christian clerk who goes from saloon to saloon giving out gospel tracts and leading in prayer where the proprietor will allow him to pray.

To show the kind of heroic stuff out of which the gospel fishermen are made I would point you to the tragic history of the greatest missionary of the Fiji Islands as he personally told it to me. Many years ago the cannibals of those islands killed and ate the first missionary who had been sent there by the London Missionary society. Immediately after that event this missionary, then a young man, applied for appointment to the post of danger. He went forth with his young bride to what most of their friends thought was certain death. When the ship dropped anchor in the harbor of Suva, the native chief sent out word, "Give us another missionary, and we will make a meal out of him." In the face of that threat and of all these dangers the young missionary and his bride disembarked. For ten long years they never saw the face of a white man, except when the missionary supply boat made its biennial visit. The young missionary's children were born there, in the woods. Two of his children died because he had no proper medicine. He lived there alone with his heroic wife until he transformed the whole island. Such is the career of one heroic gospel fisherman. Are you and I ready to be as brave for Christ as were that noble missionary and his devoted wife? Are we ready to be inspired with that holy fearlessness and disregard of ourselves that we may save souls for Christ wherever we can find them, which all Christ's fishers of men should show in his service?

The true gospel fisherman must be spiritually a strong man. Peter and Andrew, to whom Christ spoke, were net fishermen. I think they rarely, if ever, fished with a line or a pole. They were in all probability the kind of fishermen you perhaps have seen off the Massachusetts coast. There the fishermen fasten their net to stakes that have been driven into the ground and the tops of which can be seen above the surface of the sea. They were physically strong men, else they could not have handled and set the nets, or they may have been fishermen who watched the surface of the sea, just as the fishermen used to do along the Long Island coast. Then, as soon as the sea would be ruffled by the schools of swarming fish, the signal flag would be lifted, the fishermen would gather upon the beach, and the longboat, filled with the piled up net, would be launched. Then the fishermen on shore would hold a rope attached to one end of the net, and the boat would be rowed out around the school of fish. Then, when the whole net had been "paid out," the boat would approach the shore, the other end of the net attached by a rope to the stern. Then the men would begin to pull the ropes

"I have orders—positive orders—not to go there; orders that I dare not disobey," said the youth who was being tempted to a smoking and gambling saloon.

"What special orders have you got? Come, show them to us if you can. Show us your orders!"

John took a neat wallet from his pocket, and took out a carefully folded paper.

They looked and read aloud:

"Enter not into the path of the wicked and go not in the way of the evil man. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it and pass away." (Prov. 4: 14-15.)

"Now," said John, "you see my orders forbid me going there with you. They are God's orders and by His help I do not mean to break them."—Ram's Horn.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WILLIAM E. ROSS.

A letter from Mr. D. M. Cloninger, Stanley, N. C., dated July 5, 1900, asking for catalogue of our school, contains this statement:

"I am personally acquainted with some of your former students, all of whom are now holding lucrative positions, and they attribute their success to the thorough training obtained at your college, and speak in most glowing terms of you and your college."

We Teach—
Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Commercial Arithmetic, Business Practice, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English.

For catalogue giving full particulars and showing that we give liberal discounts for a knowledge of English for the Shorthand Department, and Arithmetic added for Commercial Department, address

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

when her husband was living wealthy and influential, and she did not know that they would now be so ready to lend a helping hand to his widow when there were no longer any largesses to be dispensed. She doubtless had learned that

"The friends who in our sunshine live
When winter comes are flown,
And they who have but tears to give Must weep those tears alone."

But her daughters refused to leave her, and so she entreated them again, saying, 'Go, return each to her father's house, and the Lord deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead and with me.' These young women had been kindly and loving wives and Naomi's parting prayer for them was that Providence would deal as kindly by them as they had dealt with her dead sons and herself. Then Orpah with tears in her eyes, kissed her mother good-bye and returned. But Ruth, she would not go; but throwing her arms around Naomi's neck she clave to her mother-in-law, and with tears in her eyes she cried: 'Entreat me not to leave thee or return from following after thee, for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.' This vow she kept faithfully to the end. Sure enough, on reaching Bethlehem, Naomi's fears were realized. They had to live literally from hand to mouth. To keep her mother-in-law from starving, Ruth went into the wheat fields, for it was harvest time, and picking up a straw that had been left here and a straw there, and a handful yonder, took it home, and, preparing it with her own hands, made bread and kept her mother and herself alive. And see how this fidelity was rewarded, for in this same wheat field she met a rich kinsman, who sought her hand in marriage. His name was Boaz, the meaning of which word is "strength," for he was strong in riches, in influence and in character. Nor did Ruth, in the hour of her prosperity and her good fortune, forget her old mother-in-law. She took her to the elegant apartments of her own new home. No place where she herself might go was too good for Naomi. This fidelity was not only rewarded by Ruth's obtaining a husband and great riches and affluence, but in religious honor as well. For of Ruth and Boaz came Obed, and Obed begat Jesse, and Jesse begat David, and of David came Christ the Lord. She was thus the great-grandmother of David and so brought in, although a heathen woman, and made one of the maternal ancestors of God's only Son, an honor of which she little dreamed, and which had been promised only to the Jews.

The minister here entered upon the consideration of the vow itself, which he treated as consisting of two features—a renunciation, and a choice. There were some things Ruth abandoned, such as her idols and her people; there were other things she chose, such as Jehovah and the people of God. The Christian vow to-day consists of the same two parts—some things to be abandoned, and some to be chosen; some things to be given up, and some things to be chosen. He spoke of "the expulsive power of a new affection," maintaining that the best way to get men to give up what was false and inadequate was to give them something better. As one star waxes another wanes. Several people had recently joined the church under the Stuart meeting, and the speaker begged them to remember two things—Ruth's fidelity to her vow, and the reward that followed that fidelity.

GHENT CHURCH.

Rev. J. B. Winn, the first pastor of the Ghent new Methodist church, more than came up to the expectations of his new charge, which had worked so persistently for his appointment to that church. He preached his initial sermons Sunday morning and night, fairly captivating his hearers, who were present in large numbers, by his eloquent, clear and lucid exposition of his subjects. At 11 A. M. Mr. Winn took as his theme the Apostle Paul's sublime declaration, "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believeth."

From this text he built up a splendid defence of the Gospel. He traced the growth and power of Christ's kingdom in the world, and the glorious results of that kingdom from the time of the beginning of the new dispensation through all the ages. He said when Paul declared that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ it required moral heroism, for it was at a time when the Church had but few followers and was surrounded by enemies on every hand, both Jewish and heathen. But this same Gospel had forced its way through its long line of enemies, and to that same Gospel was due the growth of civilization, science, education and art, and all the wonders in the material world. But over and beyond all this it had brought vast millions of people to a knowledge of what God's purpose was in creating man that he might glorify Him on earth in becoming members of His kingdom and heirs of the promised inheritance hereafter. Unlike in the days of Paul, Mr. Winn said, it was not a difficult or dangerous thing for men now to declare that they are not "ashamed of the Gospel of Christ."

LEKIES MEMORIAL.

Rev. J. W. Stiff preached his initial sermons at LeKies Memorial church morning and night, Sunday, to large congregations, and made a fine impression. He was most cordially received by his new church, and hopes to do a good year's work.—Virginian-Pilot.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The Methodist Preachers' meeting was graced yesterday by the presence of the following new ministers, who are members of the organization by virtue of their appointment to various churches in this city and section: Rev. Paul Whitehead, D. D., presiding elder of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore district; Rev. R. D. Smart, D. D., the new pastor of Epworth church; Rev. J. W. Stiff, the new pastor of LeKies Memorial church, and Rev. J. H. Kabler, of Brighton and Gilmerton churches, on the Portsmouth district. Rev. J. B.

Winn, the new pastor for the Ghent church, could not be present, as he was compelled to leave yesterday morning for Boynton, to return with his family on Wednesday.

The following visiting ministers from other points were in attendance: Rev. R. S. Baughn, of North Mecklenburg, and Rev. W. W. Sawyer, of Pungoteague, Eastern Shore, Va.

The meeting was called to order by the retiring president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, and the opening invocation was made by Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead.

The president announced that this was the time for the election of officers for the new year, but by common consent it was agreed to postpone this matter until after hearing the reports from the churches.

Mr. W. W. Vicar asked the privilege of bringing a matter before the body and the privileges of the floor were granted him.

He said that the new Methodist church in Ghent was organized Sunday under bright prospects and with a most hopeful outlook. There was a fine congregation present at the morning service and an exceptionally large one at night, despite the very inclement weather. The pastor, Rev. J. B. Winn, preached at both services able and eloquent sermons that greatly edified his hearers. Seventy members were received by certificates from the following churches: Epworth, Cumberland Street, Queen Street, Centenary, LeKies and McKendree, and three were received on profession of faith.

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

The president asked for reports from the churches, and the following responded:

Wright Memorial—Rev. George H. McFaden stated that he had a fine Sunday school, 314 being present, and preached morning and night to the usual large congregations Sunday.

Rev. J. H. Kabler preached at Brighton Sunday morning and at Gilmerton in the afternoon. He had good congregations and pleasant services.

At Park Place Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had a large Sunday school, the room being filled to its capacity. The lecture room will be ready for occupancy within the next three weeks for holding regular church services.

Rev. S. S. Lambeth, D. D., gave an excellent report of Liberty Street church, South Norfolk, preaching to good congregations. He expects a number of valuable accessions to the church in the near future.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, a former member of the body, was present. He began his first round as presiding elder of the Richmond district at Newport News Sunday, preaching to a fine congregation. At night he preached for Rev. J. T. Routten at Chestnut Street church, to a large audience. He was received most cordially at both churches.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun reported a fine congregation at Centenary Sunday morning and a good one at night, for the weather. The meetings were of spiritual profit to all.

Dr. Whitehead preached at McKendree church Sunday morning to a large congregation and at Queen Street at night to a surprisingly large audience, for the weather. At both churches he was most cordially received. At Queen Street church he met with a member who was converted under his ministry at High Street church, Petersburg, nearly forty years ago, and the meeting of the two after a lapse of so many years was a most delightful one. The doctor said he was glad to be with the people of Norfolk, and hoped that the year would be one of great prosperity to the Church.

At Haygood Memorial, Rev. D. B. Austin had a good Sunday school and a good congregation at the morning service. On account of the storm he held no service at Bayside in the afternoon.

Rev. George Wesley Jones had a good day at Trinity church and profitable services.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian preached to fine congregations at Memorial church, Berkley. The year starts with him most encouragingly.

Rev. J. N. Latham had a good Sunday school and excellent congregations at the regular preaching morning and night.

Rev. Dr. R. D. Smart began his work at Epworth church under the most flattering auspices. There was a large and interesting Sunday school. The doctor preached to a full house at the 11 o'clock morning service, and at night, despite the rain storm, he had about 250 people to hear him. His people have given him a most cordial welcome. He received one member by certificate.

Rev. E. K. Odell preached to excellent congregations at Huntersville morning and night Sunday, and reorganized the Sunday school in the afternoon under bright prospects for the future.

Rev. C. W. Cain worshipped at Monumental church Sunday morning and night. There were many penitents and conversions at both services.

Rev. J. W. Crider preached at Port Norfolk for Rev. W. E. Judkins, D. D., Sunday morning. He had a good congregation, and the people were very cordial to him.

Rev. W. P. Jordan attended the Sunday school at Park Place Sunday morning.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had a good congregation at Lambert's Point at morning service and a small one at night. He received one member on profession of faith. The Junior Epworth League was well attended in the afternoon.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings said that the meetings of Rev. George R. Stuart at Monumental church were the greatest held in the history of that church. The people attended in great numbers and a profound and healthful impression has been made in the community. There was nothing done to be criticised and much done to be praised. The preaching of Bro. Stuart had been helpful in every respect and fully up to the expectations of all, and a great uplift to the church. He expects to have about fifty accessions on profession of faith.

Rev. J. W. Stiff, the new pastor of LeKies Memorial church, was received warmly by his people. He preached morning and night to large congregations.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

At the conclusion of the call of the churches the body was reorganized for the new year by the election of the following officers:

President—Rev. W. Asbury Christian.

Vice-President—Rev. J. B. Merritt.

Secretary—Rev. E. K. Odell.

Assistant Secretary—Rev. E. H. Rawlings.

Treasurer—Rev. S. S. Lambeth, D. D.—Virginian-Pilot.

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT CLUB.

Immediately after the adjournment of the preachers' meeting the Methodist Preachers' Christian Thought Club held a special meeting for the purpose of reorganizing for the new Conference year.

The session was called to order by the vice-president, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. K. Joliff.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The first business taken up was the election of officers, which resulted in the choice of the following:

President—Rev. E. H. Rawlings, of Monumental church, Portsmouth.

Vice-President—Rev. J. K. Joliff, of Queen Street church, Norfolk.

Secretary—Rev. E. K. Odell, of Huntersville church.

Steering Committee—Rev. W. R. Proctor, of McKendree church; Rev. Daniel T. Merritt, of Park Place church; Rev. E. T. Dadmun, of Centenary church. This committee, on motion, was appointed to serve six months.

Rev. Dr. R. D. Smart, pastor of Epworth church, was unanimously elected a member of the club.

Next Monday was announced as the regular meeting of the club, when it will hear a paper read by Mr. Joliff, entitled "A Review of Dr. Tillett's Book on Personal Salvation."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

Rev. R. H. Bennett said that there were many excellent features in the teaching of Christian Science, and he suggested that the Steering Committee appoint some brother to read a paper on "Christian Science," bringing out the many real Christian points held in that doctrine. He said he would gladly prepare a paper himself to be read but not being a member of the body now would not be able to do so.

"HIGHER CRITICISM."

Rev. W. A. Christian said he would be glad if the club would invite Rev. Dr. Buxton to read before it his paper that he read before the Tidewater Members' Union on "Higher Criticism." The request was referred to the Steering Committee.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS.

The president announced that the old constitution and by-laws drafted and adopted at the organization of the club had by some unaccountable means been lost, and that it would be necessary to appoint a committee to draft a new constitution and by-laws for the government of the body.

On motion of Rev. C. H. McGhee, the chair appointed the following as the committee: Rev. J. N. Latham, Rev. W. P. Jordan and Rev. C. H. McGhee.—Virginian-Pilot.

ROMANISM vs. PROTESTANTISM.

R. H. BENNETT.

Let us look at the other side. The grandly beneficial influence of the Reformation in England is generally conceded. Following the movement of Luther in Germany, we find the Virgin Queen upon the throne in England. It was during the age of Burton and Sir Thomas Browne, of Spencer and Raleigh, of Bacon and Shakespeare, that the ferment caused by the Reformation was at its height. The remarkable impulse given to the English mind by the Protestant movement, and this alone, can account for the literary phenomena of the Elizabethan age. Freed from the enthralling bondage to Rome, the great minds of this period were loosened from their chains, and, in all their vigor of thought and power of expression, rose at once to the higher and nobler conceptions of things both human and divine.

In Germany, while the northern part of the country readily embraced and clung to the doctrines of the great Reformer, in the southern countries, by the ecclesiastical reservation, and by the crushing power of the Inquisition, the influence of the Reformation was wholly rooted out. The result is evident. The whole of the literary activity of the nation was removed from the south to the north, and ever since, the achievements of the lower countries, in comparison with those of the north, have been insignificant. A learned Catholic divine, in describing the state of learning in Germany after the Reformation, has complained of the difficulty he experienced in finding Catholic names worthy of mention. In the seventeenth century the distracting influence of civil dissensions, and of theological disputes, prevented Germany from taking that high stand in literature which she has since attained. But the eighteenth century opens with the illustrious name of Leibnitz, followed by a brilliant galaxy, and Germany is to-day the "land of scholars."

But in no countries was the beneficial influence of the Reformation more striking than in Holland and in Scotland. The rise of Holland from an unknown dependency to one of the first nations of Europe seems almost to rival the Greece of old. Dutch scholars became everywhere famous for their number and learning. The flower of Europe genius flocked to the universities of the country. Even more noticeable has been the effect in Scotland. Before the appearance of John Knox, the people of the country had been an ignorant and degraded race, living in a state of servile dependence upon the nobles. But subsequent to the preaching of that fearless pioneer, they developed into the honest, true, noble hearted people that they are to-day; no longer subservient to the despotic will of their superiors, but steadfastly defending the principles which they had espoused. Indeed, Scotland may be said to owe everything to the Reformation. Prof. Fisher says: "The freedom of Scotland, its general intelligence, and the literary eminence which a great array of distinguished names in science and letters have given it, are the result of the Reformation. The minds of men were quickened and invigorated by the discussion of religious questions. An atmosphere was created, in which the fruits of genius and learning have appeared in abundance." And we have only to point to Edinburgh, to Oxford, and to Leipzig to see the fruits of the Reformation in their respective countries.

At the very time that the efforts of the Reformers in freeing the European mind from the bondage to sacerdotal authority, were succeeding so well, we find new countries opening to the emissaries of the Pope, and the Church riveting her fetters upon another world. By the conquests of Pizarro and Cortez compensation was made to Rome for the loss of her power in Europe. Romanism had one hundred years the start of Protestantism in America. And yet what progress has she made in elevating the condition of the people among whom she has come? Compare the conditions of the United States to-day with that of Brazil, Mexico and Peru.

When Cortez landed on the shores of Mexico, he found a happy, a peaceful, and a prosperous people. A high degree of civilization had been attained. It is true they had no letters, but whole volumes in hieroglyphics lay stored in their public libraries. They were at peace with themselves and with the world. Untold wealth had been amassed. We gather from Prescott that public buildings unrivalled in that country to this day had been erected. Agriculture and landscape gardening had been carried to a wonderful and exquisite degree of excellence. But Cortez entered this fair land. He offered them new gods to worship, with no inducement to change their religion. And, upon their hesitating or refusing to accept these strange beliefs upon so short a notice, he, by the order of the Pope, carried fire and sword through the country; pillaged, robbed, and murdered the innocent inhabitants. Some were roasted over a slow fire. Others torn limb from limb, decapitated, sawn asunder, buried alive, or tied and thrown to wild beasts. And not a crime was committed by this fanatical monster without the full consent and approbation of Rome. The instructions of the Pope were, "Wherever the Indians are slow or unwilling to embrace the Catholic religion, they should at once be attacked with fire and sword and exterminated or enslaved." Thirty millions of people advanced in the arts and sciences, in agriculture and manufacture, in morality and religion, were turned back into barbarism. Their wonderful calendar stone, puzzling the greatest scientists, their dainty designs in pottery, their sculpture, and their carvings, force us to ask—how many of the arts perished with the Aztecs? Whole tribes were marched to the baptismal font at the point of the lance. As a greater inducement to the Indians to embrace the new faith, their idols were affirmed to be saints in disguise, and the sacred eagle of the Aztecs was declared identical with the Holy Ghost. Pecuniary rewards were even offered by the priests to all who would consent to be baptized, while these devout service of the Church reported their millions of converts, and the glorious spread of the Gospel of Christ.

(To be Continued next week.)

KILLING OLD ROADS.

When Mr. Spurgeon was a little boy he lived with his grandfather, who was a minister. One of his members, named Roads, often went to the public house for a "drop of beer." This annoyed his pastor greatly. Little Charles saw his grandfather's sorrow. One day he exclaimed: "I'll kill old Roads, that I will."

His grandfather reproved him for saying such a thing. Charles said that he would not do anything wrong, but he was going to kill Roads. A day or two afterwards Charles came into his grandfather's room, saying, "I've killed old Roads; he'll never grieve my dear grandpa any more."

His grandfather was perfectly astonished, but his grandson said that he had been about the Lord's work.

Some time afterwards Roads called at the house and told the following story: "I was asitting in the public house, just having my pipe and mug of beer, when that child come in and says, 'What doest thou here, Elijah? Sitting with the ungodly and you a member of the church.'"

Roads was so struck that he went out of the public house and fell before the Lord, asking His forgiveness. He never touched beer again.—The National Advocate.

at either end of the net, dragging the fish nearer and nearer inshore until at last they would capture the whole school. Yes, those fishermen had to be physically strong men. Their nerves had to be steady, their muscles firm, or they could never have dragged in those heavy nets burdened with many fish.

A Strong Spirit Needed.

The true gospel fisherman must be spiritually, as well as physically, a strong man. The gospel net of faith is a wide net, a long net, a heavy net, and unless supernatural power be given to the gospel fisherman he will never be able to handle it. How could Charles G. Finney have been able to lead thousands and tens of thousands of immortal souls to Christ unless he had been spiritually a strong man. In his own strength as a gospel fisherman he could do nothing, but with Christ he could do all things. To show how absolutely Mr. Finney depended upon divine strength for the handling of the gospel net, one of my old Pittsburg elders used to tell me of a remarkable scene he once witnessed in a New York theater. Mr. Finney was preaching there, and the building was packed with people. After the noted evangelist had been speaking about ten minutes, he suddenly stopped and said: "Brethren, the Holy Spirit's influence is not here today. We must get the re-enforcement of the divine power, else we are helpless. Let us pray." With that he knelt upon the stage, and he prayed until the audience was melted to tears. He prayed, and such was the re-enforcement of divine strength at that meeting that the gospel net gathered the sinners in by the score and by the hundreds, although during that entire service Charles G. Finney did not preach another word. He simply prayed—pleadingly prayed. How could John or Charles Wesley, or George Whitefield, or George Muller, or D. L. Moody ever have handled the gospel net as he did unless he had been spiritually inspired and strengthened, unless he had been a man of deep faith and fervent prayer?

The Christian believer must be spiritually inspired if he is ever to become a successful fisher of men. My mother used to impress this thought upon me all my life, and especially did she try to do so after I had entered the gospel ministry. There was hardly a letter which she sent to me after my ordination that did not read like this: "My dear boy, it is important for you to be mentally equipped for your church. But, remember, a true gospel minister is essentially one who is inspired by the Holy Spirit. You cannot lead souls to Christ unless you yourself are divinely inspired. You cannot lead souls to Christ unless you have been much in communion with God, unless much upon your knees in prayer. You must plead at the mercy seat in your own home if you would plead aright for Christ in the pulpit." The mother cannot become a fisher of men and lead her children into spiritual lives unless she herself has experienced this divine inspiration. The Sunday school teacher cannot lead his class to the feet of Christ unless he himself has first been baptized by the Holy Spirit. The minister cannot truly preach Christ unless he has first taken Christ into his own heart and life. Peter and Andrew became gospel fishermen because they themselves had first seen the Master's face and obeyed his voice when he said, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."

The Importance of Revivals.

People have often asked me whether I believed in revivals of religion. Of course I do. Every one of the different Protestant denominations has been started under the influence of a revival. Nearly all the mighty men of God, past or present, have confessed the Saviour through the influence which has directly or indirectly come from some revival. But revival services can do harm as well as good. When a great number of sinners are brought to Christ through the influence of a revival and then neglected, nobody looking after the converts, nobody caring for them, nobody trying to have them identified with a Sunday school class, a prayer meeting, a Christian Endeavor society or Christian work of any kind, there is an awful lack somewhere. It is all important to lead men to Christ, but it is also important not to let them backslide by neglecting them after they have once been brought to the feet of Jesus.

A few years ago in Neuchatel, Switzerland, a number of Christian men and women got together for an interesting experiment. They meant to see what personal work among the criminal classes might do for the Master. The criminal records of that county showed that 66 per cent of all criminals liberated from the penitentiary usually returned to crime and ultimately went back to the convict cells to serve out a second and a third term. So these Christian men and women put into practice this plain, simple plan: Whenever a criminal was incarcerated some one of their number was detailed to look after that convict. In a sense he was the prisoner's guardian. This gospel fisherman would visit the cell; he would pray with the prisoner; he would send him books and give him advice, and when that convict had served his term this Christian guardian would find work and set him upon his feet. Did this gospel plan work? The records of that county of Neuchatel proved that by this gospel process the number of the returned convicts was decreased over 50 per cent. Instead of 66 per cent of criminals being returned to the penitentiary for a second or a third term there was only 12 per cent. So it is not only important for the gospel fisherman to bring souls to Christ, but it is also important to have the new converts interested in and identified with Christian work. When an immortal soul is brought to the mercy seat, the true work for the gospel fisherman has just begun. If a sinner is allowed to confess Christ and then on account of the indifference of so-called Christian friends allowed to drift back into sin, his last condition is worse than his first.

Under the Master's Eye.

But the true gospel fisherman is always working under the Master's eye, whether Christ's face is visible to him or no. After Peter and Andrew became Christ's fishermen he never left them. One night when these brethren, with John the Beloved, who was also a fisherman, and some of the other disciples, were tossing about on Lake Galilee they thought they were going to be drowned, but Christ was watching their struggles, and in the fourth watch of the night, or just about 5 o'clock in the morning, Jesus was seen walking toward them upon the waves of Lake Galilee. And after the crucifixion, when Peter and his brethren went back to their old avocation of fishing, Jesus again appeared unto them by the shores of Lake Galilee and told them to cast their nets upon the other side of the boat. The true gospel fisherman can feel that Christ is always ready to help him; that Christ will always come to his rescue when the waters of trouble begin to roll too high and the mists are settling too thickly around the gospel lifeboat.

THE AMERICAN
MAGAZINE.

This is the only illustrated Methodist magazine published in the United States. Most of our readers have seen it; if not, write us, and a free sample copy will be sent you. The Magazine is a beautiful publication, containing not only the general literature and artistic illustrations which are characteristic of the best features of the high-class secular magazines, but it has also the distinctive literature of our Church. No other magazine so richly deserves a place in every Methodist home. It is chaste in matter, lavish in illustration, ably edited, and contains departments of interest to every member of the family, old and young.

HOW THE METHODIST MAGAZINE IS REGARDED BY THE PRESS AND BY CHURCH OFFICIALS.

"We welcome it, relish it, recommend it."

—Western Christian Advocate.

"Its aim is to advocate and magnify the things which worldwide Methodism holds in common."

—Central Christian Advocate.

"A high-grade periodical, worthy of a place in every Methodist home."

—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"Instructive, entertaining, edifying."

—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A vigorous religious monthly, one that should be a benediction to many homes, and an inspiration to many lives."

—Methodist Magazine and Review.

"Ought to run easily to an issue of a hundred thousand."

—Richmond Christian Advocate.

"It ought to take the place in our Methodist homes of magazines of less religious character."

—Arkansas Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."

—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"Worthy the great Church of which it is a literary exponent."

—St. Louis Globe-Dem.

"Takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."

—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"Welcomed by the whole Methodist family."

—Bishop C. C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."

—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"I hope every Christian will have this beautiful magazine."

—Bishop J. F. Hurst.

"It ranks with the best."

—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart."

—Bishop W. A. Candler.

"A gem among the monthlies of our land."

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. Editor,—I read with much interest the proceedings of the Virginia Conference. It is a grand body of men; and if I miss some illustrious names that inevitably arise in my mind when the Conference is called, I am glad to believe their successors are worthy descendants of their sires. Bennett is presiding elder. Well, well; what next? If you won't tell him, I have picked Dick Bennett out to be a bishop. He has all the qualities—fine teaching ability, sound judgment, excellent executive talent, above all, true piety; and what is of special importance, he has come up from the ranks, and has had experience in all positions. I would not say that a man cannot make a successful Bishop who has not had this experience, but I do say that such experience is of immense advantage to any man in the episcopal office. I predict for Bro. Bennett a very successful career as presiding elder. I knew and loved his noble father, Dr. W. Bennett. Dr. Bennett was very kind to "the young man out of the wilderness," as old Bro. Thomas Branch called me, with reference to my western origin. His friendly and sympathetic fellowship was very helpful when I was pastor of Broad Street many years ago.

I see the assault of Mr. Wise on your new Constitution in Virginia resulted in affirming its validity. We all felt a measure of interest in the matter, for I dealt with a problem that confronts all. It is true our Mississippi Constitution has long since stood the test, and we felt no fear of any trouble in this State. But we are all in the same boat so far as this negro question is concerned, and what affects one affects all for weal or woe. I think every intelligent man realizes that these constitutional devices for eliminating the negro as a political element, however they may be, are only temporary expedients. Instead of doing the negro justice, they put a premium on his efforts to improve his condition. In a short while the very plan by which the ignorant negro is eliminated will produce at least a more intelligent negro; then comes the issue. The balance in the hands of the negro, whether educated or illiterate, means the bullet in the hands of the white man. If the negro won't stay under on the top of the ground, the Anglo-Saxon is going to put him under the ground. It is to shut our eyes to the fact that we are drifting wider and wider apart; that as the old negroes die out and the old Southern white men and women pass away, a totally different sentiment prevails between the races; it is an explosive sentiment, and means destruction to the negro. President Roosevelt says he is determined the deserving negro shall have a chance. I think he is right. For that reason I think the National Government ought to appropriate $50,000,000 per annum to establish free lines of transportation to Africa for all negroes who will go, and to encourage their return to that country. We cannot compel them to go; but in the coming conflict it would afford a way of escape, and once the stream was started it would grow larger from year to year. The negro has no chance in this country, and never can have. For my part, I am very glad the President has adopted such a vigorous policy. It will keep the South solid as a block of granite, and our only salvation is that we shall stand shoulder to shoulder immovably resolved to maintain Anglo-Saxon supremacy—peaceably, if we can, forcibly if we must.

We have built a magnificent new State house in Mississippi, and have hung the portrait of Abraham Lincoln in our "Hall of Fame." I am glad of this, not only because Lincoln deserves a place among any group of great Americans, but because it testifies to the world that we are above prejudice. I have not heard of any Northern State honoring Robert E. Lee in this way; so I set it down that we are broader in our sympathies, more thoroughly national in our patriotism, more truly American in our opinions than the Northern people, who frequently accuse us of sectional narrowness. I think there was some objection, on the part of some prominent people, to Robert E. Lee being placed in the "Hall of Fame" in New York. Such people exhibited a contemptible meanness of spirit, and ought to come South to learn the sentiments of true nobility. Lincoln was a great man; Lee an incomparably greater man, the only perfect man I ever read of. I have never yet found a flaw, or seen any one else who found a flaw in the character of Lee. He had every element of greatness possible in a mere man. Stonewall Jackson, himself a peerless character, said Lee was the only man he ever knew whom he would follow blindfold. By the way, I have just read the life of Jackson by Colonel Henderson, of the British army. It is a notable work, and I suppose is the best military biography of the great soldier. Among other good books I have recently read is Locke's "Freedom's Next War: For Humanity," a vigorous discussion of the principal problems of reform. He spoils it by making John Brown out a martyr—one of the shabbiest frauds philanthropy could perpetrate. To apotheosize a crazy old fanatic, who sought to deluge the South with the horrors of a servile war, is to shake one's faith in the sanity of all historical judgments. Locke need airs. Another of these good books is Hornack's "What is Christianity?" It does not sustain the reputation of its author. Another is "Science and Christianity," by Bettex. This is a battle-axe wielded by an old Norse warrior. He cuts the grit from under modern scientific infidelity in a way to make one wonder at the stupidity that challenges the Gospel. For instance, he says: "Mamma, Julius von Sachs, W. Haacke, and many zoologists are falling away from Darwinism to such an extent that at the Congress of Naturalists, in 1897, Wilser made the bold statement, 'He who is done with Darwin hardly deserves to be called a naturalist'; and not one was found to contradict him." After such a book, I undertook to read "The Passing and the Permanent in Religion," by J. Minot Savage. This man seems to swallow everything Darwin said as a long way more reliable than the Bible. The title of the book caught me; but it is a waste of time to read it—a grain of truth in a bushel of chaff. Trash, trash, trash! I am rereading with immense delight Sir Walter Scott's "Journal." Scott was a grand character, and the story of his life is an inspiration.

Yes, there are two or three books I want to write myself, but I am kept so busy with my school that I can't find the leisure essential to the best literary effort, and I shrink from anything but the best. I will live in hope, however, of some turn in the road, where I can sit down and write and write and write, whether I print or not.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

In East Tennessee we are now having almost summer heat. Two blizzards from the far north have recently started this way, as per weather telegraphic reports, but got lost and have not since been heard from. A year from to-morrow we had a wintry hog-killing season. This morning I rode a few miles to visit a sick friend, and crossed what is known as the Kentucky road. Along that road Kentuckians used to drive hogs, horses, mules and cattle to the South. That was before our mountain section was tessalated with railways. Railroads have put a stop to this stock-driving. Now we ship.

In 1851 I was on Asheville Circuit, and that year sixty thousand hogs passed through the toll-gates on the pike lying on French Broad River, in Buncombe county, N. C., and horses, mules and cattle in proportion. The country immediately on the French Broad in North Carolina is mountainous—very rough and poor. But about every five miles you found a prosperous farmer and tavern keeper. Some of them became wealthy. Amid the precipitous and barren hills along the public road could be found families, not only wealthy, but cultivated and refined in a high degree. They made most of their money in feeding stock drivers and their stock. Their tables groaned under luxuries, and their guests lay on downy beds. This, of course, was not true of the common laborer who slashed the hogs through the mud or gored the hogs. He was content to lie upon the floor before the log hear that warmed in the old-fashioned fireplace. But the gentry, who held the capital, fared sumptuously. The tavern keeper bought corn of the farmers at fifty cents, and sold it to the drivers at a dollar, and their table charges were steep enough, and they made large money.

Sixty thousand hogs was a great falling from former years. The railroads had begun to play havoc with the drivers. One hundred thousand hogs and other stock in the proportion had passed through the gates. The hundred thousand hogs probably ate at two feeds, night and morning, twenty thousand bushels of corn, therefore that much per day. What would feed one thousand hogs per day would feed one hog a hundred thousand days, or nearly two hundred and seventy-four years. If the tavern keeper made fifty cents a bushel on the corn he sold, he made ten thousand dollars on keeping the hogs one night. But the hog stands between Kentucky and the cotton belt were about eight miles apart—that is to say, the hogs could be driven only about eight miles per day. Hence the large amount of money scattered by the stock drivers along the road from Kentucky and Tennessee to the far South. But the reader will say that I am getting to be hoggish, and I will change my theme.

The trustees and faculty of Emory and Henry College will celebrate Founders' Day on the 28th instant. The founder was Creed Fulton. He

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

"Nixon has a team. He will go. Then he added, 'I wonder if they would not like me to baptize their little one.' Father Goulet and I have exchanged offices before now. I remember how he came to one of my people in my absence when she was dying, read with her, prayed with her, comforted her and helped her across the river. He is a good soul and has no nonsense about him. Send for me if you think there is need. It will make no difference to the baby, but it will comfort the mother."

Nixon was willing enough to go, but when he came to the door Mrs. Mayor saw the hard look in his face. He had not forgotten his wrong, for day by day he was still fighting the devil within that Slavin had called to life. But Mrs. Mayor, under cover of getting him instructions, drew him into the room. While listening to her his eyes wandered from one to the other of the group till they rested upon the little white face in the crib. She noticed the change in his face.

"They fear the little one will never see the Saviour if it is not baptized," she said in a low tone.

He was eager to go.

"I'll do my best to get the priest," he said and was gone on his sixty mile race with death.

The long afternoon wore on, but before it was half gone I saw Nixon could not win and that the priest would be too late, so I sent for Mr. Craig. From the moment he entered the room he took command of us all. He was so simple, so manly, so tender, the hearts of the parents instinctively turned to him.

As he was about to proceed with the baptism the mother whispered to Mrs. Mayor, who hesitatingly asked Mr. Craig if he would object to using holy water.

"To me it is the same as any other," he replied gravely.

"An' will he make the good sign?" asked the mother timidly.

And so the child was baptized by the Presbyterian minister with holy water and with the sign of the cross. I don't suppose it was orthodox, and it rendered chaotic some of my religious notions, but I thought more of Craig that moment than ever before. He was more man than minister, or perhaps he was so good a minister that day because so much a man. As he read about the Saviour and the children and the disciples who tried to get in between them, and as he told us the story in his own simple and beautiful way and then went on to picture the home of the little children and the same Saviour in the midst of them, I felt my heart grow warm, and I could easily understand the cry of the mother:

"Oh, mon Jesu, prenez moi aussi, take me wiz mon mignon!"

The cry awakened Slavin's heart, and he said huskily:

"Oh, Annette, Annette!"

"Ah, oui, an' Michael too!" Then to Mr. Craig: "You tink he's tak me some day? I'll

"All who love him," he replied.

"An' Michael, too?" she asked, her eyes searching his face. "An' Michael too?"

But Craig only replied, "All who love him."

"Ah, Michael, you must pray le bon Jesu! He's garde notre mignon." And then she bent over the babe, whispering, "Ah, mon cheri, mon amour, adieu, adieu, mon ange!" till Slavin put his arms about her and took her away, for as she was whispering her farewells her baby, with a little answering sigh, passed into the house with many rooms.

"Whisht, Annette, darling, don't cry for the baby," said her husband. "Sure it's better off than the rest of us it is. And didn't you hear what the minister said about the beautiful place it is? And sure he wouldn't lie to us at all."

But a mother cannot be comforted for her firstborn son.

An hour later Nixon brought Father Goulet. He was a little Frenchman with gentle manners and the face of a saint. Craig welcomed him warmly and told him what he had done.

"That is good, my brother," he said, with gentle courtesy, and, turning to the mother, "Your little one is safe."

Behind Father Goulet came Nixon softly and gazed down upon the little quiet face, beautiful with the magic of death. Slavin came quietly and stood beside him. Nixon turned and offered his hand, but Slavin, moving slowly back, said:

"I did you a wrong, Nixon, and it's a sorry man I am this day for it."

"Don't say a word, Slavin," answered Nixon hurriedly. "I know how you feel. I've got a baby too. I want to see it again. That's why the break hurt me so."

"As God's above," replied Slavin earnestly. "I'll hinder you no more."

They shook hands, and we passed out.

We laid the baby under the pines, not far from Billy Breen, and the sweet spring wind blew through the gap and came softly down the valley, whispering to the pines and the grass and the hiding flowers of the new life coming to the world. And the mother must have heard the whisper in her heart, for as the priest was saying the words of the service she stood with Mrs. Mayor's arms about her, and her eyes were looking far away beyond the purple mountain tops, seeing what made her smile. And Slavin, too, looked different. His very features seemed finer. The coarseness was gone out of his face. What had come to him I could not tell.

But when the doctor came into Slavin's house that night it was the old Slavin I saw, but with a look of such deadly fury on his face that I tried to get the doctor out at once. But he was half drunk, and his manner was hideously humorous.

"How do, ladies? How do, gentlemen?" was his loud voiced salutation. "Quite a professional gathering, clergy predominating. Lion and lamb too!

Ha, ha! Which is the lamb, eh? Ha, ha! Very good! Awfully sorry to hear of your loss, Mrs. Slavin. Did our best, you know; can't help this sort of thing."

Before any one could move Craig was at his side and, saying in a clear, firm voice, "One moment, doctor," caught him by the arm and had him out of the room before he knew it.

Slavin, who had been crouching in his chair, with hands twitching and eyes glaring, rose and followed, still crouching as he walked.

I hurried after him, calling him back. Turning at my voice, the doctor saw Slavin approaching. There was something so terrifying in his swift, noiseless, crouching motion that the doctor, crying out in fear, "Keep him off!" fairly turned and fled.

He was too late. Like a tiger Slavin leaped upon him and without waiting to strike had him by the throat with both hands and, bearing him to the ground, worried him there as a dog might a cat.

Immediately Craig and I were upon him; but, though we lifted him clear off the ground, we could not loosen that two handed strangling grip. As we were struggling there a light hand touched my shoulder. It was Father Goulet.

"Please let him go and stand away from us," he said, waving us back.

We obeyed.

He leaned over Slavin and spoke a few words to him.

Slavin started as if struck a heavy blow, looked up at the priest with fear in his face, but still keeping his grip.

"Let him go," said the priest.

Slavin hesitated.

"Let him go! Quick!" said the priest again, and Slavin, with a snarl, let go his hold and stood sullenly facing the priest.

Father Goulet regarded him steadily for some seconds and then asked:

"What would you do?"

His voice was gentle enough, even sweet, but there was something in it that chilled my marrow.

"What would you do?" he repeated.

"He murdered my child," growled Slavin.

"Ah! How?"

"He was drunk and poisoned him."

"Ah! Who gave him drink? Who made him a drunkard two years ago? Who has wrecked his life?"

There was no answer, and the even toned voice went relentlessly on:

"Who is the murderer of your child now?"

Slavin groaned and shuddered.

"Go!" And the voice grew stern. "Repent of your sin and add not another."

Slavin turned his eyes upon the motionless figure on the ground and then upon the priest.

Father Goulet took one step toward him and, stretching out his hand and pointing with his finger, said:

"Go!"

And Slavin slowly backed away and went into his house. It was an extraordinary scene, and it is often with me now—the dark figure on the ground, the slight, erect form of the priest with outstretched arm and finger, and Slavin backing away, fear and fury struggling in his face.

It was a near thing for the doctor, however, and two minutes more of that grip would have done for him. As it was, we had the greatest difficulty in reviving him.

What the priest did with Slavin after getting him inside I know not—that has always been a mystery to me—but when we were passing the saloon that night after taking Mrs. Mayor home we saw a light and heard strange sounds within. Entering we found another whisky raid in progress. Slavin himself being the raider. We stood some moments watching him knock in the heads of casks and empty bottles. I thought he had gone mad and approached him cautiously.

"Hello, Slavin!" I called out. "What does this mean?"

He paused in his strange work, and saw that his face, though resolute was quiet enough.

"It means I'm done with the business, I am," he said in a determined voice. "I'll help no more to kill a man, or," in a lower tone, "any man's baby."

The priest's words had struck home.

"Thank God, Slavin!" said Craig, offering his hand. "You are much to good a man for the business."

"Good or bad, I'm done with it," replied, going on with his work.

"You are throwing away good money, Slavin," I said as the head of the cask crashed in.

"It's myself that knows it, for the price of whisky has gone up in town this week," he answered, giving me a look out of the corner of his eye. "Fadad, it was a rare clever job," referring to our Black Rock hotel affair.

"But won't you be sorry for this asked Craig.

"Belike I will, and that's why I doing it before I'm sorry for it," he replied, with a delightful bull.

"Look here, Slavin," said Craig earnestly, "if I can be of use to you in any way, count on me."

"It's good to me the both of you have been, and I'll not forget it you," he replied, with like earnestness.

As we told Mrs. Mayor that night for Craig thought it too good to keep her eyes seemed to grow deeper as the light in them to glow more intense as she listened to Craig pouring out his tale. Then she gave him her hand and said:

"You have your man at last."

"What man?"

"The man you have been waiting for."

"Slavin?"

"Why not?"

"I never thought of it."

"No more did he or any of us." Then, after a pause, she added gently, "has been sent to us."

"Do you know, I believe you are right," Craig said slowly and then added, "But you always are."

"I fear not," she answered, but thought she liked to hear his words.

The whole town was astounded next morning when Slavin went to work the mines, and its astonishment deepened as the days went on and stuck to his work. Before three weeks had gone the league had bought a remodeled the saloon and had secured Slavin as resident manager.

The evening of the reopening of Slavin's saloon, as it was still called, was long remembered in Black Rock. It was the occasion of the first appearance of the League Minstrel and Dramatic troupe in what was described as a "hair lifting tragedy, with appropriate musical selections." Then there was a grand supper, with speeches of great enthusiasm, which reached climax when Nixon rose to propose a toast of the evening, "Our saloon." His speech was simply a quiet, manly account of his long struggle with a deadly enemy. When he came to speak of his recent defeat, he said:

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms; music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

was born, if I am not mistaken, in Grayson county, Va., a mountainous county, and he had no advantages of education but such as was furnished by the common schools in his neighborhood. But he was the product of pure water, pure air, and picturesque scenery, and was a genius. He had the tongue of a Tully. His words were smoother than butter, and war was not in his heart. He was the Chrysostom of Holston. His voice was soft, musical and of great compass and volume. He aroused enthusiasm wherever he went. His magnetism drew and claimed his audiences with rivets of steel. He asked for money, and it was given him. Men of every faith and order laid their gifts at his feet. Appointed to find a site for a college, he began to build at once; and at the next Conference after his appointment, he reported a huge building half completed. Emory and Henry is his monument. May it not crumble! The college was named for Bishop Emory, a Baltimorean, who was a favorite in Holston, and for the orator of liberty, Patrick Henry, of Virginia. The name Henry captivated the aristocracy of Southwestern Virginia, many families of which were collateral descendants of Patrick Henry. Madam Russell, the owner of the salt works, was sister to Patrick Henry. General William Campbell, of King's Mountain fame, was her first husband. His daughter married Francis Preston, of Abingdon, and Thomas S. Preston, John S. Preston, and the Hon. Wm. C. Preston were sons of Francis Preston. These all had money and influence, and the name Henry was a winning card. There is policy in war, and there is policy in peace. Self is about the biggest factor in the universe any way. It can't be eliminated from anything. I am afraid that all the disinterested benevolence in the world could be crammed into a quart measure. Even the glory of God is inseparably identified with the happiness of the creature. The ditty says that preachers are made of love for sinners and sumptuous dinners. When Pat was asked by the clergyman on the floor if he would have the woman to be his wedded wife, he replied, "Yis, and the niggers too."

FROM BROAD STREET.

Dear Brother Cannon.—Our new presiding elder, Rev. R. H. Bennett, preached his first sermon at Broad Street church last night to a crowded house. Such an audience I have not seen to hear a presiding elder for forty years, at least; and such a sermon! The people were held spell-bound from start to finish. Surely the mantle of his sainted father has fallen upon him. Bishop Duncan made no mistake in this appointment. The welcome that Bro. Bennett received must have gladdened his heart. The Richmond District is to be congratulated.

LETTER FROM REV. H. C. TUCKER, OF BRAZIL.

Dear Friend.—The history of active Bible work by the British and Foreign and the American Bible Societies covers a period of about forty years, during which time about 900,000 copies of the Scripture have been put into circulation. The sales have increased from year to year, reaching in 1901 nearly 90,000 copies, and for the first six months of 1902 the circulation was 67,130 copies. Romish opposition and illiteracy have been the chief obstacles encountered. The priests have destroyed all the copies they could lay hands on and have threatened with excommunication all who dared to read the Protestant Bible. However thousands of copies have been a good seed sown in good ground. They have been read, and led to the conversion of many souls. Little groups of these believers have been gathered in scores of places by the missionaries, organized into societies, and have grown into strong churches now under the care of native pastors.

Bible colportage has been and continues to be distinctly the pioneer work in the evangelization of the country. Light, life, and salvation are being brought to thousands of souls in the darkness of superstition, ignorance and sin. Multitudes of those who can read, in all grades of society, are searching to know the truth of the Scriptures, and many of the unlettered, of all ages up to fifty and sixty years of age, are being awakened to learn to read in order that they may examine for themselves the wonderful things of God.

Romish archbishops, bishops, and priests in recent council, alarmed at this wonderful movement which they are powerless to stop, authorized the Franciscan monks of Bohia to make a new translation into Portuguese from the Vulgate of the separate books of the Bible, with explanatory notes; and these small volumes are being sold at the mere cost of printing, as the editors say in their preface, "in order to provide the people against the false and mutilated Bibles that the Protestant sects are scattering so profusely in the country."

The missionaries and native teachers gladly testify to the value of the Bible work, and many of them are active in the circulation. There is an accumulating wealth of testimony as to the power of the Written Word to awaken, enlighten and lead souls to Christ and to the joy of His salvation.

Thus the enemies of our cause, our friends, and the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost all attest the importance and great value of the Bible work in Brazil. We have abundant reason to say with the Psalmist, "I will praise thee with my whole heart; for thou hast magnified thy Word above all thy name."

HUGH PRICE HUGHES.

One of the great privileges of our many trips to the old world was that of knowing and often hearing three of the greatest preachers of the closing years of the nineteenth century—Charles Spurgeon, Joseph Parker and Hugh Price Hughes. Two of them died late in November, within a few days of each other. Of Dr. Parker we may write later.

The life of Mr. Hughes was brief, but brilliant and intense. He was born at Carmarthen, Wales, Feb. 8, 1847. His grandfather, Hugh Hughes, was a distinguished Wesleyan preacher; his father a practicing surgeon. His great-grandmother was the daughter of a Jew who became a Christian. In infancy Mr. Hughes was taught to pray, and from early childhood to the day of his death, he believed in the power of prayer, and that God answered prayer. He made it the habit of his life to pray about everything. When he was about five years of age, his sister Bessie was taken suddenly ill. It was observed by the family that Hugh was missing, and search was made for him. While walking through the corridor searching for him, his mother heard a little voice pleading: "Please, God, don't take Bessie from me! Please, God, leave sister with me!"

When he was thirteen years old, there sailed into Swansea Bay a fleet of Cornish fishing-boats, which carried many Methodist fishermen. They attended the meetings held in the little Wesleyan chapel, and young Hughes was greatly impressed by their enthusiasm, the heartiness of their singing and the fervor of their prayers. Mr. Hughes said he was convicted of sin about that time through general influences, but the visit of these godly fishermen brought things to a crisis. For weeks he was in deep spiritual distress. One day while walking with Mr. George Leaker, one of the tutors, they fell into conversation about religion, and Mr. Leaker was moved to urge young Hughes to a decision for Christ, which he made. He did not at that time, however, receive the witness of the Spirit. This came later during a service led by a layman named Captain Knapp. Captain Knapp had recently come from America on a visit to his friends, and was pressed into service that day. Mr. Hughes did not know the preacher, nor did he afterward remember his text, but he distinctly remembered that the substance of the sermon was: "I have no time to give you a definition of regeneration, justification, but I can sum up everything in one word—submit to Christ. Mr. Hughes submitted to Christ, and of the experience which came to him that moment he writes: "It seemed as if a great light suddenly shone on my dark heart, and an assurance was given me that God accepted me through Jesus Christ. I was so happy, that whether I walked home or floated through the air, I cannot say. It was a lovely Sunday evening in June. That night Mr. Leaker read the story of the crucifixion from the narrative given by St. Matthew. As I listened to it and realized for the first time that He suffered this for me, I burst into tears and wept for very joy."

He was only thirteen years of age, but began to preach at once. His first sermon was in a cottage to an audience of not more than a dozen. He stood on the cottage floor, before a table spread with a white cloth and illuminated by two tallow candles, and took for his text: "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." The message found in this text is the epitome of his lifework. Mr. Colston, who was present, severely criticized the sermon, but he predicted: "That boy will one day be president of the Conference."

This service impressed young Hughes himself that God meant him to be a preacher, and soon after he wrote the following laconic letter to his father:

MY DEAR FATHER: I believe that it is the will of God that I should be a Methodist preacher. Your affectionate son, HUGH

The father replied in an equally laconic letter:

MY DEAR BOY: I would rather you be a Methodist preacher than the lord chancellor of England. Your affectionate father. JOHN HUGHES

Previous to the receipt of the son's letter, the father had intended to try him for the bar. His youth, and especially his small stature, frequently caused his statement that he was a preacher to conduct the services, to be received with incredulity. On one occasion a chapel-keeper refused to believe him, and talking the boys were "larking," said to Hugh and the friend accompanying him: "You go and stand under the gallery!" In his sixteen year he was invited to preach the anniversary sermon in the Methodist church at Carmarthen, of which his grandfather had been the minister. The large building was crowded in every part, and ten or eleven ministers were sitting on the pulpit steps. He took his text, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," and preached a sermon which so pleased the people that they showed their appreciation by presenting him a copy of Watson's "Institutes."

Between the ages of seventeen and twenty-eight, young Hughes had theological training at Richmond, and some literary advantages, and fell into a literary and didactic style, which he entirely abandoned after the

SECOND GREAT CRISIS IN HIS LIFE

An important event in the life of Mr. Hughes was the convention for promotion of scriptural holiness, held in Brighton in June, 1875. Ministers from all parts of Great Britain, Europe were present; services were held in English, German, French, Italian in a number of different places beginning at 7 o'clock in the morning and continuing until 9:30 at night. This convention marked the beginning of Mr. Hughes' life of absolute surrender to Jesus Christ, and the new experience into which he then entered, the secret of much of his power in years. From this time to its end his life to the British Isles was a life of cloud by day and of fire by night. When he appeared on the platform at St. James Hall, speaking to great multitudes of West End London, and the tripod of the Methodist Times which he inaugurated, the whole Protestant world began to listen, gaze with wonder at the rise of such a bright star.

At our second Ecumenical Conference which met in Washington City in 1888 he arose upon the Western Hemisphere in all of his full orb'd splendor and shall never forget the expressive the faces of the great audience when his first cyclone broke upon the multi-tude. Dr. Jas. M. Buckley, the unchallenged champion of the Occident in extemporaneous or off hand debate, had just closed one of his characteristic five minutes' speeches. Very few men of the new world have the temerity to oppose this electrical Gatling gun, or flash light encyclopedia in a five minutes' debate. Buckley's last sentence had not ceased its echoes before Hughes was in the midst of one of the most drastic speeches to which we had ever listened. He was standing toward the rear of the great audience directly behind the first speaker, who was looking back over his shoulder in bewildered astonishment at the sudden discovery that the old world had a buzz saw as well as the new. The chairman and audience were as much thrilled by his discovery as was Dr. Buckley, and enjoyed it equally as much or more.

Our last meeting with Mr. Hughes was on a beautiful Sunday afternoon in London. We had spoken to his last audience in St. James Hall, after which a large part of his membership, singing thrilling hymns with a brass band accompaniment, followed their heroic leader to Hyde Park. In this park, the forum of the world, he stood in a goods' box, with many thousands around him, and blew a blast from his Gospel trumpet that will doubtless echo in the memories of many through all the ages. These were the last words we ever heard from his eloquent tongue.

We have seldom met three men more dissimilar, Spurgeon, Parker and Hughes, yet we loved and admired them all. They are doubtless walking the hills of glory to-day, arm in arm, still interested in the problems of London, the British Empire, and the world. May the Lord help us to be as faithful to our little trust as they were to their large ones! We should drop flowers and tears upon the graves of each.—Dr. W. P. Palmore, in St. Louis Advocate.

OBITUARY.

NICHOLSON.—Bertie Scott Jeffress, born in Mecklenburg county, Va., October 2, 1854, daughter of the late H. T. Jeffress and wife, Fannie Scott, and beloved wife of Rev. J. W. Nicholson, of the Virginia Conference, and mother of Dr. N. A. Nicholson, Ben M., John H., and Bertie Jeffress, and died September 29, 1902.

We chronicle the departure out of this life of no ordinary woman, but one in whom was developed the completeness of perfect womanhood, so far as true goodness and Christian culture can develop during human probation. The memory of her consecrated life, adorned with the diamond settings of Gospel graces, is fragrant with the incense of a pious life, and gives her name to the future, through the influence she exerted while living: for while "she rests from her labors, her works do follow her."

Thirty-two years ago Sister Nicholson gave herself to Christ, made a public profession of her faith, and united with the Church. On the third day of December, 1878, she united in marriage with Rev. J. W. Nicholson, heard in wealth and splendor, without hesitancy, but with heart and soul, she entered into the work to which her husband had been called. The last work she did for the Church militant was to preside over a meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society. Six children blessed their wedded life, of whom four survive her, one of the number—little Bertie, sweet child, with golden curls, a mother's treasure. Our departed sister's life was one of rich fruitage—of deathless success and influence. Quiet, unobtrusive, undemonstrative, the Gospel revealed and illustrated the doctrines of the cross of her life, which was "hid with Christ in God."

As a wife, she was the angel of a husband's life and the constant benediction of his home. The storms and tempests, the cares, worries and excitements of the outside world were subdued in her presence, and beneath the influence of her love, her sympathy, her smiles, were powerless to disturb the peace and quietude of the Christian home.

Her worth, known so much to all who knew her, by Him was known to be too great for human estimate; she was in value priceless; incapable was a husband's high appreciation to approximate the true estimate of that worth.

As a mother, loving, devoted, self-sacrificing, she was to the dear children God had given her all that the sweet word means; and none but mothers such as she can tell the experience of her heart when called upon to submit to the will of God, that she must leave them and not be permitted to see them grow up to manhood and womanhood under the influence of her love and tender care.

As a friend, she was true, trusting and abiding. There was nothing false in all her life and character. I was a frequent visitor to her home; I knew her well. To her hypocrisy was unknown.

As a Christian, she was devout, sincere, submissive, considerate, conscientious and consistent.

To the earth-life of such a woman there could be but one ending. To a heroism of faith like hers there could be but the triumph of the Christian Victor. To her life was unending, for her death (so called) was the surviving of immortality. Sister Nicholson was sick three weeks. The best medical talent was procured, trained nurses, and all that a husband's love, means and sacrifices could do were furnished, but all in vain. It soon became known that her translation was near, and that home, Church, husband, children and earth friends must submit to the Father's will, and heaven become enriched by their loss.

From memory will never fade the scenes witnessed in the chamber where she met and conquered death. If ever heaven and earth embraced and kissed each other, it was when our holy Christianity enabled her to "triumph over nature in her saddest hour," and, with dauntless valor flashing from the pallid brow, she conquered mortal terrors and suffering, and she went "sweeping through the gates, washed in the blood of the Lamb." She was conscious to the last. Her last words, "I did not know heaven was so close by." Thus closed the earth-life of a good woman.

Her funeral obsequies took place at the home of her brother-in-law, Mr. W. P. Rodwell, Oakville, N. C., and were conducted by Rev. W. W. Lear. The casket was covered with rare and costly flowers. To God and the Word of His grace we commend the bereaved, and as they gather around her grave in their family garden, and while husband and children and a host of loving friends give to that tomb the baptism of their tears, I give them the Apostolic benediction, and place this imperfect, but sincere, memorial tribute as an evergreen wreath upon the mound which marks the place of sepulchre of one whose holy and consecrated life and influence will live through all her posterity, and generations yet unknown will call her blessed and give her name to immortality.

LESSON XI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 14.

Text of the Lesson. 1 Sam. III, 1-11.
Memory Verses. 7-10—Golden Text,
 1 Sam. III, 9—Commentary Prepared
 by The Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1907, American Bible Association.]
 And the child Samuel ministered unto the Lord before Eli.

See the same statement with an addition in chapter II, 18, and note that children may minister to the Lord, and no priest is called to anything greater (II Chron. XXIX, 11), but every believer, being a priest (I Pet. II, 9), is expected to stand before the Lord, to serve Him, to minister unto Him and offer sacrifice. It is said that the word of the Lord was precious (or rare, R. V., margin) in those days. There was no frequent vision, and yet here is a most important message given to a little child.

2-5. The Lord called Samuel, and he said, Here am I.

Then he ran to Eli thinking that Eli had called him, and Eli told him to lie down again, not thinking that possibly the Lord had spoken. Eli was not only physically infirm, but he was out of fellowship with God in some measure because of the iniquity that was in his household. This should lead us to consider most prayerfully if there is anything in our hearts or homes that may prevent us from hearing the voice of the Lord.

6. And the Lord called yet again, Samuel, and Samuel arose and went to Eli and said, Here am I, for thou didst call me.

And for the second time Eli told him to lie down and did not seem to think that the Lord had perhaps called him. How often has the Lord called us and we did not know or recognize His voice! By His word, by His Spirit, who generally speaks to us through His word, sometimes apart from it, but never contrary to it; by His providences He seeks to instruct us and guide us, but we are so dull of hearing, so preoccupied, so full of earthly things.

7, 8. And the Lord called Samuel again the third time, and he arose and went to Eli and said, Here am I, for thou didst call me, and Eli perceived that the Lord had called the child.

What a blessed son! What unwearied obedience! How many of us answered the first time the Lord called us? What might have been our condition today if He had not so patiently and persistently called us again and again! How blessed the assurance of Prov. i, 23, but how awful the possibility of verses 24 to 31. See in this boy the faithful training of the mother who had suffered so much in her own home and had also been misunderstood and misjudged by Israel's high priest (i. 6-8, 14, 15), but had learned to know God better than many. Yet it would seem that Samuel had not been taught that the Lord in heaven sometimes spoke to people on earth, or if he had been told of God's messages to Adam, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses and others he seems not to have been taught that the Lord might do so again.

9, 10. And the Lord came and stood and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak, for Thy servant heareth.

Thus Eli had instructed him to do if he should be called again. We should never open the word of God or listen to an exposition of it without some such prayer and expectation that the Lord will indeed speak to us and open our eyes to behold wondrous things out of His word (Ps. cxix, 18). He desires our fellowship and companionship; He wants to tell us all that is in His heart for us as far as we are able to bear it. He wants to accomplish His purposes through us, and so He is looking over the whole earth for those whose hearts are whole toward Him (II Chron. xvi, 9). The angels do His commandments, hearkening unto the voice of His word (Ps. ciii, 20), and we do not honestly pray "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven" unless we desire the same in ourselves.

11-14. I will judge his house forever for the iniquity which he knoweth, because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not.

Or as it is in the margin, "He frowned not upon them." The law about rebellious sons is found in Deut. xxi, 18-21, and God had not failed to give Eli due warning and had told him plainly that in not restraining his sons he was honoring them above God (chapter ii, 27-29). It means a great deal to be on the Lord's side, for it may mean that we must take a very decided stand against those who are very dear to us, not against them, but against their evil ways, which if they prefer rather than the right ways of God and of those who love them it must mean separation from them in some sense. We cannot have fellowship with God and with sin, with God and with the world lying in the wicked one (I John ii and Jas. iv, 4). It seems to some who profess to believe God and hold and teach His truth a small matter to have fellowship with others who teach that much of the Bible is not reliable and the Lord Jesus is not God, but God sees it and will requite, though He bear long with it. We may wonder if either Eli or Samuel slept much more that night, but we are told that in the morning when Eli asked Samuel what the Lord had said Samuel told him every whit and bid nothing from him (verse 28). It seems to me that the great things written of Samuel in the last three verses of the chapter are intended to show us how the Lord honors those who are faithful to Him, according to chapter ii, 30. We note also that the Lord continued to reveal Himself to Samuel, and all Israel knew that Samuel was a faithful prophet of the Lord (verse 20, margin). Eli's acknowledgment of his just desert is worthy of special attention. "It is the Lord. Let Him do what seemeth Him good" (verse 18). Compare Job i, 21; Ps. xxxviii, 15; xxxix, 9; II Sam. xv, 25, 26.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 14. "Our Fellowship"—Text, Ps. cxxxiii, 1-3; I Cor. xii, 12-27.

"Now ye are the body of Christ and severally members thereof."

Christian fellowship is different in nature from all other fraternities because the fact on which it is based is unique in human society.

Men may form associations for mutual defense when fear of a common foe and knowledge of individual weakness prompt to united action. A company may be formed to get and share profits which no one can gain so easily alone as can be done by several united. Losses may be calculated with much probability and risk distributed. Numberless causes make men unite for greater or less time and under a great variety of pledges and obligations.

No other associations have the solemn necessity and binding obligations of this Christian fellowship. None other is so venerable, none so deep based, so rich in heritage and so full of promise for future needs. Clubs and societies of various kinds and for almost every conceivable object—social, benevolent, business and religious—claim attention at the present time, in many communities they seem to be given preference over the church. Neglect of church services for meetings of the lodge is often defended on the plea that the lodge will buy one at death and care for one when sick if dues are paid regularly, and so it must be attended, whatever becomes of the church.

Perhaps the church has not had so great care for the body as was desirable. Possibly some form of organization similar to the sick and burial societies might be formed among the membership. Certainly more care of the sick and needy than is given in many churches might well be taken. More interest to get work for the unemployed and relieve the need of the poor and helpless would be in keeping with the example and teaching of Jesus. But no one of these, not all combined are the distinctive work of the church of Christ.

Care for the body is very much to be commended, but neglect of the soul is inexcusable. Our peculiar work is the cure of souls. The spirit is more than the flesh. The body is of value solely on account of its relation to the spirit. In our care for it we are never to lose sight of this fact. The end sought is to benefit the inner life, the immortal part of man. Bodies shall die however cared for. If the spirit be rightly fed and cared for, it shall live eternally and be clothed with a glorified body fully fitted for spiritual service.

Our association is not a temporary convenience, but a never ending relationship. It is not a matter of our originating, but conferred on us by the Lord Jesus. Its value is not in hand clasps nor ritual, but in heart life and true affection. Most sacred, most enduring of all human ties, it binds to Jesus as well as to our fellow men.

Have we received all the fullness of the Master's spirit so that we fully share His purposes and feel the impulses to all Christlike affection and service and delight in self sacrifice and helpfulness?

And if our fellowship below in Jesus be so sweet
 What heights of rapture shall we know when round His throne we meet!

Cheerfulness.

But cheerfulness is always in place except at a funeral or a dying bed. The house of God should be a cheerful place, and people should come with grave but cheerful mien before the Lord. Right in the home, in the presence of father, mother, all the children and servants, is where good cheer should be manifested in looks and speech. So in God's house the same thing is becoming. Under the beams of divine love coming into the heart there should be light and comfort and peace. The situation justifies good cheer in the soul, and there is nothing out of harmony with the occasion.—Christian Instructor.

The Partnership With Christ.

The pledge of our success in overcoming and in service is the partnership with Christ. He is not merely an onlooker in our work. He suffers in defeats. He rejoices in our victories. So real, so vital, did this partnership appear to the apostle that he thought of his old life as dead. "I have been crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me." This is the completed and efficient life which so identifies itself with Him that His will is our will, His joy our joy, His strength our strength.—Congregationalist.

Swearing.

"Are you paid anything for swearing?" Eli Perkins once asked a con-mmercial traveler. "No, I do it for nothing." "Well," said the lecturer, "you work cheap. You lay aside your character as a gentleman, inflict pain on your friends, break a commandment and lose your own soul and for nothing! You do certainly work cheap, very cheap!" American Friend.

Yes and No.

Nothing is a better test of character than the ability to discern when it is well to say "no" and when it is better to say "yes." The man who assents to everything equally with the man who opposes everything will be a failure. Life is neither all affirmation nor all contrariety.—New York Observer

Brooding Over Troubles.

Excessive anxiety and gloomy anticipation are the bane of many lives. Troubles are brooded over that never come or if they come are not half as bad as was imagined. Few are content to live day by day and hour by hour, taking things as they are sent.—Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Jesus Christ alone attained perfection.—Rev. Dr. Nixon, Baptist, Boston.

The Divine Initiative.

Our salvation is of the divine initiative.—Rev. John Herron, Presbyterian, Akron, O.

Sharers in Glory and Suffering.

If we expect to share with Christ in his glory, we must be willing to share in his sufferings.—Rev. Dr. A. R. Holderby, Atlanta, Ga.

Age of Understanding.

Science, instead of undermining religion, has really demonstrated it. This age is the age of understanding.—Rev. Dr. Wortman, Reformed, Orange, N. J.

Not Luck, but Pluck.

Luck has no place in the vocabulary of the earnest young people today except as you place a "p" before it and spell it "pluck."—Rev. Dr. Lewis, Worcester, Mass.

The Best Way.

The best way to Christianize people is by our own Christian example and showing them love and helpfulness.—Rev. Mr. Baker, Congregationalist, Woodstock, Canada.

Co-operates With God.

He who launches a love or a truth on the sea of human consciousness co-operates with God in perfecting the creation.—Rev. A. R. Tillinghast, Universalist, Waterloo, Ia.

Religion and the Moral Code.

Our religion gives us our moral code, which is the basis of all relations to both God and man, and those relations give value to life.—Rev. Andrew F. Heltman, Presbyterian, Denver.

Doing One's Whole Duty.

Religion in its last analysis is the simple hearted doing of one's whole duty to God, neighbor and self in that state of life to which it has pleased God to call one.—Rev. Dr. William H. Lewis, Episcopalian, Bridgeport, Conn.

Life Follows the Heart.

Life follows the inclinations of the hidden nature. The deeds of men are but the manifestations of the unseen spirit which rules in the secret chambers of the heart. The life does follow the heart.—Rev. Dr. Polemus H. Swift, Methodist, Chicago.

Overcoming Troubles.

Troubles cannot be rightly anticipated because we cannot rightly anticipate the grace of God will give to his believing children, by means of which we shall be able to overcome our troubles when they arrive.—Rev. Dr. Frank

De Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Purity of Heart.

The subject of heart purity pervades the whole Scripture and could be supported by a thousand direct quotations. For us to claim that no one can attain purity of heart is to charge God with inconsistency in requiring the impossible.—Rev. Alonzo Monk, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Soul Growth Takes Time.

The ordinary growth of the soul takes time. When we come into great gloom concerning ourselves, we can serve God by remembering what he has done and cast out despair. We can serve God by putting ourselves in the place of other men.—Rev. F. J. McConnell, Cambridge, Mass.

Wealth Not National Greatness.

When shall we learn that the possession of great wealth can never of itself make our country great. We are only great when principles of righteousness and truth are inculcated and observed, when the great laws enshrined in the constitution of our country are respected and enforced.—Rev. Frank A. Dörner, Methodist, Cleveland.

The Genius For Work.

There is no genius like the genius for work. The men who are succeeding are men with the talent for toil. This is true in the world's work. This is true in God's work. Attention and work, these are the conditions for prosperity and pleasant years. Would we have prosperity and pleasantness as the years come and go? Let us attend unto God, let us serve him in sincerity and truth.—Rev. Daniel H. Overton, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

Religion and Business.

The spiritual life is enhanced and glorified by an honest business life. The spiritual does not antagonize the natural. There is no conflict, but mutual helpfulness. Christianity never taught asceticism. Its devotees were to be in the world, yet not of the world. A man too pious for citizenship is not an ideal Christian and must render unto Caesar the things of Caesar. A woman too pious to attend to her household duties is not an ideal Christian.—Rev. John Brushingham, Methodist, Chicago.

God's Glory Undimmed.

Imagine what strength would come to the church if today throughout the land the clergy would arise and announce "All is well." With what courage and inspiration would the worshippers pass from our temples if every minister would today deliver a sermon which should have these three heads: first, Science Has Not Taken Away God; second, Scholarship Has Not Destroyed the Religious Value of the Bible; third, Research Has Not Dimmed the Glory of Christ!—Rev. R. W. Rogers, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Brotherly Love and Business.

Brotherly love should control us in our business relations. The man who loves his fellow men will pay an adequate rate of wages. That does not mean a sum of money which represents just one remove from starvation. No man ought to be content that the people in his factory, in his mine or in his shop should live like the bondmen in Egypt. No man has a right to profit by his brother's misfortune, nor should he permit the pursuit of any work under dangerous or insanitary conditions.—Rev. Olin Scott Roche, Episcopalian, New York.

A man may shout ever so loud against the saloon business, but the government does not hear him until he talks through the ballot box.—Home Defender.

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

H. H. SEAY.

I don't believe there is any better insurance on the market than the UNION CENTRAL. I carry $10,000 with them.

THE POST-GRADUATE INSTITUTE OF THE VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

This institute began its existence at the late session of the Conference, with a membership of forty. The object of the institute is the study of such books and subjects (to be selected by the executive committee) as will help to a better discharge of the duties of the Christian ministry. The membership requirements are membership in the Virginia Conference, the completion of the Conference course of study, and the annual payment of a fee of 25 cents. The books chosen for this year are, Berdoe's Browning and the Christian Faith, Gould's Biblical Theology of the New Testament, Clarke's An Outline of Christian Theology. The institute will hold its next meeting during the session of the Conference at Charlottesville, at which time the students of the year will be reviewed under competent leadership.

Any person eligible to membership may join the institute by sending his name and the fee of 25 cents for the first year to the secretary and treasurer, G. H. Lambeth, Boydton, Va. The undersigned would be glad to correspond with any persons interested in the work of the institute and desiring information.

All members who have not paid their dues are urged to send the same to Bro. Lambeth. Bro. L. also desires the names of all who may wish sets of the books for the course of study. It is important that prompt attention be given to these matters.

W. J. Young, Chairman.

CONFERENCE SECRETARY OF MIS- SIONS.

I am now located at Reidsville, N. C., distant from Danville only 40 minutes by the main line of the Southern Railway. There are 16 passenger trains daily, of which six regularly stop here. I am situated about as conveniently to my work as if I were anywhere in Virginia, and as I can use my own house for a dwelling, it serves me better than most places. By arrangement with the Mission Board, I am allowed to accept some engagements for revival work. This I propose to do, as far as possible during the winter, in the eastern part of the Conference, and later on I will work in the western and central territory. I shall be glad if the brethren need me for any purpose, to hear from them early. Last year I was compelled to decline some desirable engagements because my time was already promised. I shall be always ready for work in the interest of the W. M. S., and hope the good sisters will use me.

Fraternally,

W. W. Royall.

REV. W. E. THOMPSON.

Rev. W. E. Thompson concluded his four years' pastorate at the First M. E. Church, South, yesterday, and on next Sunday will enter upon the pastorate of the First M. E. Church at Memphis, to which he has been transferred by Bishop Hoss. He will be succeeded here by the Rev. Walker Lewis, of Atlanta, Ga., as predicted in "The Democrat" several weeks ago.

Rev. Thompson came here four years ago from Boydton, Va., and his pastorate, in the estimation of his official board, has been one of the most successful in the history of the congregation. "His administration has been the most prosperous since that of Rev. W. G. Miller sixteen years ago," said Mr. W. P. Field to-day. "He has had larger congregations than any other pastor we have ever had and they have not been confined to the members of the church. Another notable feature of his audiences has been the great number of young men whom he attracted by his strong, manly, and yet beautiful sermons. Frequently there have been as many as 300 young men at the services who ordinarily attend no church at all. The membership has increased from 650 to over 800 during his administration. He has built and paid for the auditorium of the church, having found only the chapel and the foundation when he came. This has cost about $35,000, and yet the church is practically free from debt, and the last payment, due in January, is secured in notes and will be promptly met. He has been a power for good in the church and in the city, and his loss will be deeply felt by the people of Little Rock and especially the people he has served so long and faithfully."—Arkansas Democrat.

The National Temperance Society, carrying forward with great vigor its pledge signing crusade. The aim is to secure five million signatures of drinking men to total abstinence pledge. This in itself would be a tremendous victory for temperance.

A correspondent writes us from Louisiana: "Our village is quiet and orderly since the bar-rooms have been closed. Public sentiment is stronger than ever against the liquor traffic. I do not think that we shall ever have another saloon in our community. So the good cause goes marching on and more and more our victories are to stay."

Religious News.

Rev. and Mrs. D. G. C. Butts and family left for their new home in Lynchburg, to the great regret of very many warm friends. Rev. Mr. DeShazo now has charge of this circuit and has met with a generous welcome by the people.—News.

Rev. E. F. Garner, the new minister appointed on this circuit, reached here on Monday and was given a grand welcome by a crowd that had gathered at the parsonage. Mr. Garner will fill the regular appointments on Sunday, preaching at Henderson's at 11 A. M. and Melrose at 3 P. M.—Heathsville Cor. Va. Citizen.

Rev. W. E. Allen, of the Methodist Church, preached at the Baptist church on Sunday night to a large congregation. Our people of every denomination are loth to part with Rev. and Mrs. Allen, who have been here two years and endeared themselves to every one. They go to Boykins, and we wish them much success in their new home.—Windsor Correspondence Suffolk Herald.

There was scarcely a vacant seat in the lower portion of the main audience-room of Laurel Street Methodist church last night to hear the Rev. Dr. Henry C. Johnson discuss the subject, "God's Appeal to a Human Jury."

The sermon was both eloquent and logical and held the rapt attention of the large audience from its beginning to its close.

Mrs. Heslep sang the "Holy City" with fine effect. Three new members were received by certificate.

Rev. Walter Holcomb, the evangelist of Montreat, will be married today at Statesville to Miss Blanche Robbins, daughter of Maj. W. M. Robbins. This should have been announced last week. Our absence at Conference till almost the hour of going to press caused the oversight. We feel a large degree of personal interest in the couple and wish for them great happiness and success in life.—N. C. Advocate.

Rev. J. M. Anderson and wife arrived Tuesday and took up their abode at the parsonage. They were cordially received by members of the Methodist church. Some have known Mr. Anderson for several years, and this acquaintance augurs that the new pastor and his good wife will in a short time work into the acquaintance and affections of all. Mr. Anderson will fill the regular appointments on Sunday, preaching here in the afternoon.—Va. Citizen.

Hundreds of Methodists assembled at Broad Street church yesterday morning in the union Thanksgiving service. The sermon was preached by Dr. H. E. Johnson, pastor of the Laurel Street church. Dr. Edward Leigh Pell, than whom there is not a better judge in the city, said the discourse was excellent. He thinks Dr. Johnson is one of the most attractive Methodist preachers in the State. He is simple and unaffected in manner, uses simple language, but all conveying some good truth and impressive thought. The singing was good.

Last night the Laurel Street church gave their annual Thanksgiving supper. Dr. John Hannon delivered a characteristic lecture in a characteristic manner, entitled, "My early Courtship."—Leader.

Rev. C. R. James and family left us Tuesday on Capt. Messick's steamer, Daisy, for their new charge at Sunny Side, Va., near Cape Charles. The people of this charge were loth to give them up, and all regret that they are not located nearer to this people whom Mr. James has served four years with ability and fervor. Each and every member of the family shared with Mr. James in the attachment which the people of this section exhibited, without distinction as to denomination.—Va. Citizen.

Danville, Va., Dec. 6.—W. D. Gregory, of Chase City, was stricken with paralysis in the store of C. C. Snead & Son last night. Mr. Gregory, who is president of the Chase City Manufacturing Company, was in the city in the interest of his firm, and was calling on the trade at the time when the attack came. He was removed to Mr. Snead's residence.

While not unconscious, Mr. Gregory has lost all use of his limbs and is almost speechless. His mother was telegraphed for, and arrived in the city this morning.—Dispatch.

Sunday morning was a big time at Monumental M. E. church. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Rawlings, extended an invitation to any who wanted to connect themselves with the church to come forward. Forty-seven persons presented themselves, forty-one were admitted by profession of faith and six by letter. This was the outcome of the Stuart meeting. A statement was read showing the financial condition of the church to be splendid during the Conference year just closed. Eight thousand and seven hundred dollars was raised by the church. Of this amount $3,400 was paid for regular expenses, $3,600 for miscellaneous work, such as improvements to the church, the twentieth century fund and orphanage fund, and $1,700 to mission work.—Virginian-Pilot.

The services at St. James Methodist church Sunday, both morning and night, were of an unusually interesting and deeply spiritual character. Rev. W. A. Cooper, the new pastor, has entered upon his work with an earnestness and zeal that are infectious, and already good results are seen. The morning sermon—an eloquent and forceful discourse—was followed by the administration of the Lord's Supper, and never has the congregation seemed more deeply moved.

At night Mr. Cooper, after preaching a short sermon, installed the following officers of the church, closing the ceremony with an excellent talk on their duties and responsibilities: Dr. F. W. Stiff, S. W. Evans, George W. Walford, W. E. Woody, E. P. Bickers, John E. Walford, L. W. Smith, S. D. Turner, B.

W. Bandy, C. H. Crew, C. R. Wren.—Dispatch.

The first quarterly conference of the new Ghent M. E. church was held last night, and the church formally organized by Presiding Elder, the Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead. The Rev. J. B. Winn is pastor of the church, and will be assisted by the following officers:

Board of Trustees—W. D. Roberts, T. W. Worsham, D. W. Odell, George L. Whitehurst, E. Tatterson, Frank Harris, J. W. Pedin, T. S. Southgate and C. N. Whitehurst.

Board of Stewards—J. W. Grandy, P. J. Malbon, T. H. Stiff, W. J. Woodward, F. Odend'hal, W. W. Vicar, Jas. A. Rives, Jr.

Recording Steward—P. J. Malbon. District Steward—J. W. Grandy; alternate, W. W. Vicar.

Sunday School Superintendent—W. H. Newell.

Next Tuesday night the board of stewards will elect a chairman for each of these bodies.—Virginian-Pilot.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, the new presiding elder of the Richmond District, preached last night in the Broad Street Methodist church to a large and appreciative congregation. He chose "Missions" for his theme, and his text was from Mark 16: 15: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

This was Mr. Bennett's first effort as presiding elder. He began by saying that he was glad to be with the congregation, and expressed his thanks for the cordial manner in which he had been greeted. He told the congregation that he could not help being a presiding elder, and expressed a hope that the members would not "lay it against him." He said he had always had his own congregation to love, but as presiding elder he would not belong anywhere.

"I would rather have the love and esteem of our good people," he continued, "than all else in the world." He craved the prayers of the members of Broad Street church for the work in the Richmond district during the year, and spoke hopefully of what might be accomplished with the interest and co-operation of all concerned.

When he reached the subject of his sermon, Mr. Bennett delivered a thoughtful and earnest missionary address. It showed that he had made a careful study of the missionary enterprises of the denomination, and that he knew what he was talking about.

The central thought of the discourse was that the commission given by Christ just before His ascension into heaven was to the Christian world what the constitution of the United States is to this great country.

As a presiding elder Mr. Bennett promises well, and the leading Methodists of his district expect great things from him. He is one of the leading ministers of the Virginia Conference of the younger element.—Leader.

A very interesting meeting of the Anti-Saloon Convention of Bedford county, was held this week at the Baptist church. An organization was effected by the election of Rev. W. S.

Royall, pastor of the church, as temporary chairman, and Rev. J. W. Shackford, of the Methodist church, as secretary pro tem. There were two sessions of the body held during the day, and a number of forcible addresses were made, emphasizing the evils of the open saloon. Rev. Dr. C. H. Crawford, State superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, addressed the convention, his theme being mainly the temptations that boys and youths are subjected to by easy access to intoxicating beverages, and urged earnest and concerted effort against saloons. The bus and before its adjournment the following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year: Professor E. Sumter Smith, principal of Randolph-Macon Academy, president; Rev. W. S. Royall, county superintendent; Rev. J. W. Shackford, secretary; J. L. Scott, treasurer. The vice-presidents for the several magisterial districts of the county are: Central District, W. B. Overstreet; Chamblissburg, S. P. Harris; Staunton, Thomas H. Turner; Otter, John B. Gardner; Bellevue, Captain Thomas S. West; Forest, Rev. J. M. Street; Charlemont, Hon. R. G. Turpin.—Lynchburg News.

Rev. Robert P. Lumpkin, who is a Manchester "boy," preached two sermons to his new charge, Epworth Methodist church, Sunday morning on Randolph street, both of which were heard by large congregations.

At the morning service the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated.

Epworth church is an offspring of Laurel Street church, having been organized under the third year's administration of Rev. Travis J. Taylor, now of Danville, and from the present outlook, and under the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Lumpkin, Epworth has a bright future.

On Sunday the pastor received eighteen by letter, most of whom had withdrawn from Laurel Street church since the recent split in that congregation, and there are yet many others who will deposit their letters with this offspring.

The pastor is being assisted by Rev. W. A. Laughon in his pastoral duties.

A regular meeting of the Sunday school was held Sunday afternoon and the following officers elected for the ensuing year:

Superintendent, George W. Kinsey; Assistant Superintendent, L. E. Busser; Secretaries, W. H. Stockmar, R. S. Duke, and I. A. Kinsey; Chorister, G. W. Kinsey; Organists, Misses Annie R. Kinsey and Blanche A. Whitmore; Treasurer, R. F. Walker; Librarian, Emmett Clay; Assistant Librarians, George Wilkinson and Lawrence Perkins; Custodians, Earl Walker, Leo Busser, and Beverly Richardson; Secretary to the Sunday School Board, Thos. J. Dance.

H. Carter Osterbind, formerly superintendent of Laurel Street Sunday school, was named by the superintendent as teacher of the Bible class of the Sunday school, which is composed of about eighteen members.—Dispatch.

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago

Chicago. —A message of reverence and appreciation for people who have passed life's meridian is contained in this discourse by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage on the text Psalm xcii, 14, "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age."

Old age is a haunting specter. It has terrorized the generations past more than even the fear of death. The most hated and feared of all the Grecian philosophers was he who used to stand upon the street corners of Athens frightening the passersby with these solemn words: "You will be an old man. You will be an old woman." He frightened the passersby because most people do not want to become old. They are afraid of coming to the time when they will be a burden to their children and their friends. They are afraid of the time when their earning capacity shall cease, for then, in the race of life, they will be jostled and left far behind by the speed and the strength of the younger generation. They are afraid of the years when they will have to walk with a cane or crutch or sit in an invalid chair waiting for the time when the coffin maker will finish their casket and the undertaker will order their grave to be dug. To show how depressed some people are over the fact of growing old I would read a letter which I received some time ago from one of my people:

Dear Mr. Talmage—Last night in your sermon you stated that this is the age for young men. You did not have time to speak one word in favor of the usefulness of the old people. I was sorry. I knew of some sitting near to me who would be heavy hearted on account of their old age. This morning an aged member of your church called upon me. He said he was so depressed over your remarks last night that he could not sleep. With tears in his eyes, he said, "I wonder if old people will be wanted in heaven." Now, my dear pastor, I would like you, if possible, to preach a sermon upon the blessings of old age. I would like you to preach a sermon to cheer up those who have passed the zenith of their earthly life and are sliding down the other side and nearing the landing place of eternity. You will, will you not?

It is in answer to the request in this letter that I am going to speak this morning to the old folks. I will gladly try to refute the popular fallacy that old age for the Christian is merely a time for tears, for physical and mental pains, and for depressing helplessness. It was a true thing that an aged minister said to Jacob A. Riis, the New York reformer, "My son, I am on the sunny side of sixty, because I am near to the glories of heaven." The words of my text do not state that an aged Christian's twilight of life upon earth is a gloomy and a sullen sunset. They do emphatically imply that the last days of an aged Christian's earthly life should be among his happiest and most useful days. Those days should be compared to the time when the orchard's branches are bending under the heavy load of the ripened autumnal fruit.

Old Age's Testimony.

The aged Christian is able from his own experience to testify of the protecting care of a Divine Father's love. The difference between the testimony of an old man and a very young man is the difference between knowledge and sur-position, between fact and surmise. 1. is the difference between the words of a veteran who carries the scars, the sword cuts and the bullet wounds of many battlefields and the words of the ruddy faced youth who has not yet won his shoulder straps or seen anything but the recruiting officer's papers. It is the difference between the experience of an old pilot of the Hough river, the most dangerous navigable river in the world, who has for many years guided the boats up to the wharfs of Calcutta, and the experience of the cabin boy who has not yet learned how to handle a wheel. It is the difference between the diagnosis of the old, gray haired physician who has prescribed for hundreds of fever patients and the diagnosis of the young medical graduate who has just received his diploma. It is the difference between the words of the young statesman just elected to congress and the words of the first president of the United States when he was about to leave the presidential chair for the last time. When George Washington delivered his farewell address at the inauguration of John Adams, the American people did not reverence his words because he wielded a more trenchant pen than Thomas Jefferson or because he was a more impassioned orator than Patrick Henry. They revered his words because he spoke as one having authority. He spoke as one who had led the American armies during the darkest days of the Revolutionary war. He spoke as one who had stood at the helm when the ship of state was just launched. He spoke as one who had been willing to offer his life as a sacrifice for his country's good. The American people listened to him in the same spirit with which the French audience heard the aged patriot Lafayette when the chairman introduced him with these beautiful words: "Fellow citizens, I would have you listen reverentially to the speaker of the day because sixty years of a noble life are about to address you."

God's Promise True.

My aged Christian friend, there may be other brains just as keen as yours. There may be other hearts just as willing to make sacrifice for their Lord and Master as yours, but no Christian can as powerfully testify of the protecting care of a Heavenly Father as you can testify unless he can truly speak out of his own experience. The saint who is nearing the end of life has the clearer view of heaven. You can speak about the goodness of God from personal experience, as my father spoke to me a few years before his death by telling me this remarkable incident: When he was a young minister, he used to keep a diary, in which he made a record of all the requests he made to God concerning matters which were then weighing upon his heart. By some mishap he lost that diary, and he forgot about those prayers he had offered. Some twenty or thirty years later he found that diary. When he opened it and read the many requests that he had made nearly a quarter of a century before, he found out that God had answered every one of his prayers. God had answered them with better results than even his faith at that time had dared to hope. So the aged Christian opens the book of memory. As he fingers the many soiled leaves of that book he testifies how God cared for him when he was a young man. He testifies how God cared for him when he was middle aged, and he testifies how the love of God is protecting and caring for him now that he is an old man. He testifies just as the aged psalmist testified of God's goodness when he wrote, "I have been young and now an old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread."

Never let any man tell you that the aged Christian's influence is a useless influence. The Bible distinctly says, "They shall still bear fruit in their old age." No better fruit can it bring than the personal testimony of God's faithfulness, which your children will never forget. When skeptics assail them with doubts, they will be able to say, "My father put God's promises to the proof, and he declared that he had found them true."

Sustained by the Gospel.

One night in a large infidel meeting an old gray haired Christian woman arose and addressed the speaker in these words: "I would like to ask the speaker what his infidel beliefs have ever done for him? My gospel religion sustained me when I was left a poor widow with six fatherless children to support. My religion has given me hope and courage when I have had to stand by the brink of an open grave. My religion has made me a purer, truer, braver woman to face the struggles of life. That, sir, is what my faith in Jesus Christ has done for me. What have your infidel beliefs done for you?" The infidel could not answer. The whole audience realized that the Christian woman was speaking out of her own life's experience. So the mightiest witnesses for God are those whose Christian testimonies are the outgrowths of the many, many years that are gone.

The aged Christian influences for good those who are near to him because he is able to lavish upon them a wealth of boundless, fervent, tender Christian affection. While we are young and even middle aged we spend most of our time in doing for others rather than in showing the sweet manifestation of our affections. We are like Martha, who went into the kitchen to cook Jesus a dinner, rather than like Mary, who sat at the feet of Christ.

When Jesus, sad and weary, longing sore for love's sweet service, sought the sisters' door,

One saw the heavenly, one the human guest.

But who can say which loved the Master best?

While we are young or middle aged we are like the busy merchant, who spends most of his time in the store and the office in order to earn money enough to support his children, rather than like the old grandfather and the grandmother, who spend most of their time in spoiling their grandchildren until at last the married daughter turns and says: "Father and mother, I believe you love my children better than you ever loved me when I was young. Anyway, you pet them far more than you ever petted me." Many a mechanic has but little time to fiddle or caress his own children. He has to leave home for work before the children are out of bed. He does not return until late at night, when the babies have been again tucked away in their cribs.

A Mighty Influence.

Editor Brown said that it took him nearly a fifth of a century to find out how much his father loved him. When he was a boy at home, his father was always busy earning money to support the family. Sometimes he was self absorbed, gruff and stern and seemingly harsh. But after awhile his father's health broke down. Then the boy felt he ought to leave home, as there were too many mouths to fill from his father's scanty savings. The morning he left the old man walked down the road with him. Then the feeble old father put his hand upon the young man's shoulder, and tears came into his eyes and his lip quivered as he said: "My boy, I don't want you to leave home. As long as I have a crust of bread, my child, I am ready to share it with you. You had better come back." "Then," said Editor Brown, "for the first time in my life I realized the immensity of my father's love. All that day a sweet throated songster kept singing in my heart: 'He loves me. He loves me. Father loves me. Yes, he loves me.' And when, some years later, an evangelist compared God's love to a father's love I arose in that meeting and gave my heart to God. I knew that my earthly father loved me. Yes, I knew that he loved me." So the Christian's old age is the time when he can best demonstrate the wealth of his affection for those who are near and dear to him and when he can best influence them for good.

The statement that the aged Christian can exercise a mighty influence for good over the lives of those who are nearest and dearest to him is especially true if those dear ones in turn have children of their own. I do not believe a man ever fully appreciates the love of a parent until he himself is married and has babies about his own family table. It is only after a man has had the worries and the anxieties of his own home troubling his heart, it is only after he has stood by the side of the cradle and nursed his baby boy through the awful sickness of diphtheria, it is only after he has got his own family burial plot and has dug therein a little grave for one of his own babies, that he begins to fully appreciate what his father and mother in their time have done for him.

The Spirit of Reverence.

The aged Christian is able to inspire the spirit of reverence in the hearts of many with whom he comes in contact. This spirit is a growth, and not an act. It is a germ seed which often takes years and years to develop, and not an entity which springs into being at a jump or a bound. It generally starts away back in the nursery. If the child learn to respect his mother, then it is very easy for him to learn as a boy to respect his teachers. If the boy learn to respect his teachers, then it is very easy for him as a young man to learn to respect his Christian employers. If a young man respects his Christian employers, then it is very easy for him as a middle aged man to learn to respect the aged Christian servants who for years have been living at the Divine Master's feet. If the middle aged man respect God's aged Christian servants, then it is very easy for him to learn to respect the God whom those Christians serve and to communicate that respect to others.

Thus God uses your physical weaknesses and your mental helplessness for a purpose. When he sees you, an aged Christian parent, being tenderly cared for in your old age by a loving son; when he sees that son giving to you the best room in the house and the easiest armchair and the softest bed; when he sees that son trying to make your last days upon earth happy and peaceful, then we can imagine him saying: "That young man who is caring so tenderly for his aged Christian parent is capable of great love for me and my children. The young man who is true to his old mother, by my grace, will always be true to me. I will honor him because he has honored one of my aged servants." Did not God say in his Ten Commandments, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee?"

Honor Old Age.

A beautiful German story relates

Dallas, Texas, August 3d.—The right to sell liquor in Hunt county, adjoining Dallas on the north, expired at midnight of Saturday, and prohibition went into effect at that hour for the next two years.

Pearl Austin, Toby Jackson and Pete Dewey determined to "drink whiskey till the last minute under the law." Each had a large bottle. The three men were standing in a farm wagon just as the clock struck 12. Austin raised his bottle to his mouth, saying, as he did so: "Here goes the biggest drink ever taken in Hunt county." He took a long pull at the bottle, when his head bent far backward.

Suddenly he began to reel, then to lurch, and in a moment fell to the floor of the wagon. Physicians were called, but it was too late; he had taken his last drink and drawn his last breath.—The National Advocate.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

B. Winn, the first pastor of the Ghent new Methodist church, and his wife at the tabernacle, corner of Stockly Gardens and Raleigh avenue, last night, was an exceedingly pleasant affair.

The pulpit and chancel were decorated with flowers of the rarest kind, which added beauty to the scene.

A large and cultured audience had assembled to greet formally Dr. and Mrs. Winn, among whom were the following ministers: Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead, presiding elder of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore District; Rev. E. T. Dadmun, pastor of Centenary church, Norfolk; Rev. J. W. Stiff, of LeKies Memorial church, and Rev. E. K. Odell, of Huntersville church.

The reception opened with devotional exercises, prayer being made by Rev. E. T. Dadmun.

Then followed the address of welcome to Mr. Winn and his wife on behalf of the church by Mr. W. W. Vicar. He said in part, "That the members of the Ghent church are present to-night to receive you with open hearts and hands, and are ready to co-operate with you in building up the kingdom of Christ in this part of God's moral vineyard, and they propose to hold up your hands in making this church a spiritual power in this community. We asked for your appointment to this new charge because we felt that you were the man to carry forward the movement to a permanent and satisfactory success and to make this church a power for good in Norfolk by building us up in the faith and practice of the Gospel."

Rev. Mr. Winn, though much affected, responded briefly but most appropriately. He said: "I am here to spend my powers mentally and spiritually to bring about the very best results, and to advance the cause of Christ in every way possible both in my preaching and pastoral work, and I trust our coming together and our united efforts will redound to our good, the good of the community, and the glory of the Master."

Following the address of Mr. Winn was a most delightful and enjoyable musical and literary programme, as follows:

Piano solo ..... Miss Bessie Poes.
Song ..... Mrs. Bailey.
Recitation ..... Miss Mary Woodard.
Song ..... Miss Newell.
Recitation ..... Miss Respass.
Song ..... Mr. Bertie Hodgson.

The pleasures of the evening closed with a bountiful distribution of choice refreshments.—Virginian-Pilot.

The Methodist preachers' meeting was largely attended yesterday morning, the pastors from all of the churches in the three cities being present.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian presided, and the opening invocation was made by Rev. J. H. Kabler, of the Brighton and Gilmerton churches.

The committee appointed at the last meeting to look into the character of the work of the city mission and its needs and report at this meeting announced through its chairman that the managers of the city mission would hold a meeting at Epworth church at 4 P. M. to-day and that the committee would meet with them and go over the situation, and would submit a full report at the preachers' meeting next Monday.

UNION CHRISTMAS SERVICE.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun stated that it had been a custom with the Methodist denomination to hold a union service on Christmas day—and on his motion it was decided to hold a service of this character at 11:30 o'clock Thursday, December 25th, at Cumberland Street church, and Rev. J. B. Winn, pastor of the Ghent new Methodist church, was appointed to preach the sermon.

ALL OF THE CHURCHES.

Rev. J. P. Barrett reported a good day at the Christian Memorial Temple. He received five on profession of faith.

Rev. Dr. Smart had a pleasant day at Epworth. He had a fine congregation at the morning service, and an overflow audience at night. He received four members by certificate.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings preached morning and night at Monumental church, and a very large communion service, and was assisted by the Rev. C. W. Cain. He received forty-five members into the church—thirty-eight on profession of faith and seven by certificate.

Rev. J. B. Merritt reported a good day at the Seamen's Bethel.

Rev. J. W. Crider worshipped at Epworth church Sunday morning and assisted Dr. Smart in a large communion service. At night he was at Cumberland Street church.

Rev. J. H. Kabler, the new pastor, preached at Brighton Sunday morning, and at Gilmerton at night to a large congregation. He had a very large communion service.

Rev. Paul Whitehead preached at LeKies Memorial church Sunday morning, and the pastor, Rev. J. W. Stiff, at night. There were large congregations at both services. The Sunday school was a very large one.

Rev. J. B. Winn reported a very fine day at the Ghent church. His congregations morning and night more than filled the seating capacity of the tabernacle. At 3 o'clock an Epworth League was organized, and at 4 o'clock the organization of the Sunday school was completed.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun reported a pleasant Sunday at Centenary church. He had a fine congregation to hear him at the morning service. Dr. Whitehead preached at night to one of the largest congregations for some time. Two members were received by certificate.

Rev. L. W. Guyer, the new pastor of Owens' Memorial church, reported the work begun at his church under promising auspices in the Sunday school. He had a fair congregation at the morning service, and an unusually large one at night. He organized a children's society in the afternoon.

At Queen Street church Rev. J. K. Joliff had most interesting services. Rev. Daniel T. Merritt was with him in the morning and assisted him at communion service.

Rev. W. R. Proctor reported the usual services at McKendree church, and a large communion service.

Rev. George Wesley Jones preached to full houses morning and night at Trinity church.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had two additions to the Sunday school at Lambert's Point. He preached to good congregations, held an interesting Junior Epworth League in the afternoon, and conducted the Senior League meeting at 7 P. M. He received one member by certificate, and one on profession of faith.

Rev. E. K. Odell conducted the usual services at Huntersville church, and one new member was received by certificate.

Rev. C. L. Bane reported most pleasant services at Cumberland Street church morning and night. The communion service was a very helpful one. At night the church was filled by an attentive audience.

Rev. George H. McFaden reported services at Wright Memorial morning and night. The congregations were large on both occasions.

At Central church Sunday proved to be a most pleasant day. The new and handsome edifice was filled at each service, and the pastor, Rev. W. T. Green, received four new members on profession of faith.

At Park View Sunday was a day of unusual interest. Rev. J. N. Latham preached morning and night to fine congregations.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian had an interesting day at Memorial church. He said his congregation had given him a very pleasant surprise during the past week by supplying the larder with all the necessary comforts for the winter.

The preachers and their wives were extended an invitation from the ladies of the Ghent church to attend the reception to their new pastor and wife, to take place at the tabernacle on Raleigh avenue and Stockley Gardens last night. The invitation was accepted with thanks.—Virginian-Pilot.

THE CONFERENCE SESSIONS—SOME IMPRESSIONS.

By Rev. J. E. DeShazo.

The arrangements and facilities for the same were unusually fine, and showed skill and industry in the committee of arrangements. The young blood in the committee displayed tact in the securing of a large number of homes—relieving the Conference fund of the usual strain, and placing the men in easy reach of the church by street car lines.

THE FARE.

All the places selected for the dining of the Conference were for the most part satisfactory. But one complaint reached us, and that was respecting a dairy lunch room, on Broad street, where, doubtless, they bit off more than they could chew in the number they expected to entertain daily, and because it was near there doubtless was a rush of visitors.

GOOD BEHAVIOR.

After the usual disorder consequent upon the greetings, was observed by all, though the comfort of attendants was somewhat interfered with by the ushers in rigidly enforcing the order to keep the "bar" clear. The preachers without the bar are sometimes as bad as visitors within the bar, and they have no right to throw stones. The secular papers did the Bishop injustice in saying he was discourteous to the ladies. But his gallantry is too well known for him now to be scandalized by the press. The South Carolina lady who wrote inquiringly on this point wasn't ignorant of the true inwardness of this affair. The Bishop is given to pleasantry, and has lots of Irish persistency. He sometimes, however, "paternizes" the Irishman, who had his laugh before perpetrating the joke—had he waited, the laugh would have been on the other side.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER

had no gavel, but he ought to have one. We decidedly like his management of the body, but think he is disposed to talk a little too much; a wise silence in many cases would be better. And there is a shade too much of repartee for the comfort, at least, of the "old stager," who is disposed to take everything seriously. Sometimes the Bishop's cuts drew a blister on tender cuticle, and even tough ones often felt the caustic. On the whole, his presiding is a shining success. No man has succeeded better in keeping the members "up to the scratch." The basement was almost emptied, lounging and smoking were at a tremendous discount, and, as far as our information goes, the "Kitchen Cabinet" wasn't in it.

The depletion of the ranks of the itinerant body was unusual. There was a considerable dropping out from various causes: age, ill-health, etc., etc. More than a dozen retired, and some of them young men. Fears were entertained that the supply would not be equal to the demand, but an unusually large class for admission met the exigency and adjournment was reached with not more than the usual appointments "to be supplied." The coming back to the active work of some of the superannuates helped to relieve the strain. And recent marriage among the old men of the Conference tended to hold them up in the ranks—"faint, yet pursuing."

The restoration of the Farmville District was doubtless set at rest not so much by the refusal of the Bishop as by the action of the laymen of the body. A meeting held in the interest of the restoration by divided counsels, militates against restoration, at least the movers for restoration were not strong enough to create sympathy among the laymen favorable to it; besides the restoration would prospectively entail a larger assessment for the presiding elder. If enlarged districts have not brought relief in this matter, it is because the elders have been allowed too much sayso in fixing the salaries. Other districts, too, would have to be overhauled; better let the matter stand. One thing is certain, from this and other straws, district parsonages cut no figure in our Conference, not one is of any value as a preacher's home, or figures an iota in the making of the appointments. The elder provides his own home and lives where it suits him. The Farmville and the Eastern Shore district parsonages are on the market, and the best way to meet the inevitable is by submitting to it.

The resolutions of the Norfolk and Portsmouth preachers' meeting cut no figure, or next kin to none, in the administration of affairs, seeing that the answer to them was the continuing in the eldership of the men who had been longest in it, and the appointment of them to the very districts where the resolving was done; as much as to say, resolutions are cheap, it doesn't cost much to make them, and they do not, after all, mean much. The Bishop complained of the besetting committees, but the only thing that avails is a committee to say, "We will not have this man to rule over us."

The appointments were, on the whole, not less satisfactory than usual—this is putting it mildly, for on such a point it becomes us to speak guardedly. It is a delicate and difficult work. Influence, too, counts for much, "and fools rush in where angels fear to tread." To the outsider, it looks like some things might have been bettered, but how is the hard part. It looks like a heavy expense entailed on men, and on the Church, the move from one extreme to another. Then the matter of health, and home, and school ought to be considered, but they don't seem to enter into the account. The outside clamor for the man is allowed too much weight. The ending of responsibility, too, by those who should take it like men counts.

The missionary secretary feature is greatly to be commended, and will bear good fruit, and especially through the excellent appointee, Dr. W. W. Royall, who is familiar with that work, and will, we trust, with the blessing of God, put the mission fields of the Conference in better shape, as well as to stir up interest. We trust to see in some sections of the Church some real work for missions.—Danville Methodist.

FINANCIAL PLAN.

(This plan was adopted by the Gainesville District Conference in Georgia.)

The following plan, believed to be sufficiently elastic and adjustable for all charges, stations, circuits, and missions, whether in towns or in the country, is hereby recommended by the committee on finance:

1. That the assessments for all church purposes shall be made on the basis of weekly contributions, to be collected, in the main, and as far as possible, by the envelope system; the envelopes to be supplied to each enrolled member of the church, and to be deposited in the collection basket each Sabbath. (The head of the family—father or mother—of course may contribute for the children who are members of the church, but it is believed to be best, from an educational point of view, for the contributions to be divided among all the members of the family who are connected with the church.)

2. That in the case of those who cannot, for any reason, attend the regular church services, such members may deliver the envelopes with their contributions to the treasurer of the board of stewards, or, in the country, at least, if more convenient, to the steward on whose list the individual member may be.

3. That members in arrears for one month shall have statements mailed to them by the treasurer (assisted, if need be, by a number of stewards designated for that purpose), showing the amount of arrearage; the statements to be made on the first of each calendar month. In the country such statements of arrearage may be made by the stewards, each steward being responsible for the members on his list; and such statements may be made at the expiration of two months at furthest, instead of one month, as in the case of stations.

4. That members in arrears for two months, in towns at least, shall be seen by the collectors, and the amounts due collected. In the country, in all possible cases members in arrears for three months should be seen by the collectors and the amounts due collected.

5. That the treasurer shall have the list of members assigned to each steward or collector, and when members are in arrears for two months shall furnish the stewards or collectors with names of members in arrears and the amounts of arrearages; the treasurer to be aided by a number of stewards designated for the purpose, and constituting the finance committee of the board. The business of the finance committee is as follows: (1) In conjunction with the board of stewards, to make or equalize the assessments on the individual members; (2) to keep the membership supplied with envelopes; (3) to notify the members of any arrearages; (4) to collect arrearages; (5) to report to the church and quarterly conferences; (6) to make regular settlements with the pastors; (7) to settle all accounts against the church. The finance committee is not an innovation, but has been practically for a long time in operation in a good many places, the real work of the stewardship having been done by a few members of the board, the others being advisory or honorary. The advantage of the finance committee, as constituted from the board of stewards, is: (1) It places the actual work in the hands of a smaller number, who can conveniently and frequently get together; (2) it places the work in the hands of those who have the time, opportunity, and adaptability for doing it. The other members of the board may be as valuable, or more valuable, as advisers and helpers in planning the work of the church. However, it may be deemed best in the country, and in some towns, for each steward to do his own work, without the intervention of treasurer and finance committee, the entire board of stewards in such cases constituting the finance committee, of the church. When desired, two committees may be appointed, instead of one: (1) The board of stewards entire, or with the finance committee, may undertake to raise all assessments made on the church for pastor and presiding elder; also for Bishops, domestic missions, foreign missions, education, church extension, superannuated preachers, etc.; or assessment for pastor and presiding elder; the other to raise the other assessments indicated above. Or (3) the Board of Stewards can raise the assessments for pastor and presiding elder, and the other assessments can be placed in the hands of an outside committee. However, it is believed to be best for the stewards to undertake the raising of all the assessments, making one assessment for ministerial support—for pastor and presiding elder)—and collecting this amount in separate envelopes, on which shall be printed the words: "For Ministerial Support"; and collecting the other assessments in separate envelopes, on which shall be printed: "For Bishops, Domestic Missions, Foreign Missions, etc." The separate collections will differentiate the claims, and prevent confusion in their division and disbursement.

6. That the amounts contributed by the membership shall be reported in detail, showing the individual contributions at the expiration of three or six months, at church and quarterly conferences as the pastor or the conferences may call for them.

7. That the reports thus provided for shall be printed and distributed among the entire membership at the expiration of each month if deemed best (on stations), or at the expiration of three months or six months as may be desired.

8. That the sum of the weekly assessments, for one month or one quarter, may be paid all together by those who desire to do so, in which case it is desired that, whenever possible, payment shall be made in advance; if not, then as soon as possible during the quarter, and without failure by the expiration of the quarter.

9. That to the assessments for ministerial support—for pastor and presiding elder—shall be added such a sum as will reasonably cover the expense incurred for envelopes, printing, etc. If it is proposed to raise the conference assessments and the assessment for ministerial support all together, of course the former assessments will have to be added.

10. That the pastor's salary shall be paid, as far as practicable, on the first of each calendar month. This is believed to be practicable in the main in most charges, whether in town or country. Certainly no charge should delay full settlement of the pastor's salary beyond the quarter.

The foregoing plan is believed to have the following advantages:

1. It is more in accord with the Divine idea of making contribution, of "honoring God with our substance," as laid down in the Bible. The divine injunction is: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by in store as God hath prospered him."

2. It commends itself on business principles, as against the unbusiness-like, slipshod policy in vogue in many places in undertaking the Lord's work. This plan is obliged to succeed where given a chance to succeed; the other policy has always failed, and is obliged to fail.

3. It keeps the church posted, as the Discipline contemplates, as to the finances, and gives the members an intelligent conception of what is being done or not being done, encouraging those interested in the welfare of the church, and inciting, if possible, to effort those who are indifferent to the financial and all other interests of the church.

4. It distributes the burden of church-support, placing it on the entire membership, instead of a few faithful men and women who are now bearing it, and have done so for years.

5. It tends to relieve the pastor from the "serving of tables," and gives him more time to devote to study, preparation for preaching, pastoral work, etc.

6. It is modern and up-to-date—in harmony with plans in operation in other churches of all denominations which are trying to be something in the world, and to do something for their Lord.

7. It is in harmony with the Discipline of the Church, which contemplates (1) that the burden of church-support shall be borne by the entire membership according to ability; (2) that the assessments be met regularly—by "weekly, monthly or quarterly" payments; (3) that the membership, as occasion may require, shall be posted as to the financial condition of the church.

8. It will promote, in no small measure, the spiritual as well as the material interest of the church. These interests go hand in hand; they are inseparable. Rerelict at one point—that of maintaining with our money the Lord's cause—means failure at other points. Mr. Charles G. Finney, that prince of evangelists, used these strong words: "Where a church is niggardly and parsimonious in its treatment of a minister, inattentive to his wants, tardy in paying his salary, planning to avoid all expense, close-fisted in regard to supporting the Sunday school, missionary societies and the cause of Christ generally, it may expect that God will withhold from it His sympathy; that He will do nothing to manifest His approbation of such a course; that, since it tenaciously withholds from Him, He is constrained to withhold from it. I beseech those churches that are not favored with revivals of religion to inquire into the reasons. They may rest assured that the fault is at their own door. God never withholds His Spirit when He can honorably bestow it."

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT CLUB.

The Christian Thought Club was called to order by Rev. E. H. Rawlings. The members reported on the books read since the last meeting.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian was appointed to review "The Social Law of Service," by Ely, at the next meeting in January. The board then heard a most excellent book review given by J. K. Joliff. "Personal Salvation," by Dr. W. F. Tillett, was the book reviewed. The book and the paper were then discussed by some of the members and then the meeting adjourned.—Virginian-Pilot.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

EDITORIAL.

BISHOP SMITH AT NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The following, taken from the Raleigh Advocate, gives some information of interest to our readers:

We are not going too far when we say that Bishop Smith produced a profound and lasting impression on the Conference. The universal refrain was, "I am certainly pleased with Bishop Smith." His preaching on Sunday was of a high order. His personality is strong and magnetic. We believe that Bishop Smith will be associated in the mind of our Methodism with Bishop Marron. There are in the two characters many points of similarity. Bishop Smith's spirituality is marked. We heard a presiding elder say on the day of adjournment: "This is one Conference which has improved my spirituality." The Bishop left on Monday for the present of the Alabama Conference. He will always be warmly welcomed as the president of the North Carolina Conference.

"Prepare your sermons as thoroughly as if everything depended on you, and then go into the pulpit feeling that everything depended on God." This is only one of the many striking epigrams used by Bishop Smith during the sessions.

The Sunday school room in Grace church was called by Bishop Smith the "Court of the Gentiles." It afforded the brethren fine opportunities of disturbing those who were trying to listen in the main auditorium.

J. E. Holden, G. R. Rood, and N. C. Yearby, were received into full connection. Bishop Smith said:

"You must have faith in God, a personal experience of God's approval. You must keep in constant touch with God if you would lead other men to Him. Pious talk brings religion into discredit if the speaker has not the experience in his own heart and does not live daily his profession. You are to have a growing faith, and if you have not this faith now, don't let another day pass before you experience this faith in your own heart. Jesus Christ is bigger in the eyes of the world to-day than ever before. Have a growing faith and keep in constant touch with God.

"I want you to understand that the love of God perfected means the love of man as well. There are some men who seem to love men less the greater the love they profess for God.

"Love men, see the good in men. The Master found good wherever He could find it. We are to save men by a positive Gospel. We can never save them by a Gospel of negatives. Cultivate the big virtues in men and you will kill out their little vices.

"I beg you to preach a whole Gospel. I beg you not to preach a one-sided Gospel. The grace of God is manifold and covers everything, so think on great things and preach on great things. It will be necessary for you to preach on special subjects, but never belittle the Gospel by preaching on some little theme.

"The world was never hungrier for the Gospel than it is to-day, but you can't feed hungry men on wind, and the east wind at that. Don't try to draw men to you by any clap-trap methods. I have never published the subjects of my sermons in all the thirty years of my ministry, except two or three times I have announced series of sermons.

"Keep out of debt and let your word be as good as your bond. Avoid debt as you would a serpent.

"Be courteous, for if any man ought to be a gentleman it is the Christian minister. Make yourselves so pleasant in the homes of the people that they will always be glad to see you, old people and young people.

"You will have responsibilities in your own home and in your church, and you cannot meet these without getting your strength from God.

"Be studious, live among the great books, but I beg you don't try to keep up with the new books of the day. Read the old books, the great books, think great thoughts and absorb the Bible into your own heart, and God will have something to bless when you come before your people.

"Prepare your subjects as if it all depended upon you, and go into the pulpit feeling that it all depends upon Christ.

"Don't think too much about your support. It is my experience that the pastor who faithfully looks after his people, that people will take care of him. Some places look hard and dark at times, but it often takes a very dark cloud to be the setting of a rainbow.

"Cultivate a sweet spirit toward your brethren. Don't hunt for faults. Anybody can find dirt, but it takes a keen eye to see gold. See the good in your brethren.

"Don't gossip, and don't let other people come to you with reports about other people.

"You are to be punctual and obey the rules of your church. You can't enforce discipline until you obey discipline."

NATIONAL ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONVENTION.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

This body met in Washington, December 9th. It was the seventh annual meeting. Never has any organization had a more wonderful growth. In seven years it has overspread our great country. It is organized in thirty-eight States; has over 200 men in the field, 22 State newspaper organs, and is recognized by the great religious denominations as no other such organization has ever been.

The Convention is never a great meeting, so far as numbers go. It is a delegated body, but the delegates pay their own expenses, and the expense is considerable, especially from distant points. But the Convention is a great meeting, when one considers the great interests discussed and the reports made from the field.

Dr. Chapman, a seventy-year-old veteran from far-off California, struck the keynote of the Convention in the first report from the field. Hope, progress, victory were the texts from the East to the West, and from the North to the South. The fight is raging hotly along the line. The greatest success is in the South so far. Arkansas, Texas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Georgia, show the greatest advance. The Kentucky League has swept the saloon out of almost the whole State, and the distillers and brewers of Louisville are beginning to quake in their shoes. County after county is banishing the saloon in Texas and Arkansas. Tennessee is pushing for a more stringent law, and has just elected a Legislature with the saloon question as the leading issue. North Carolina and Virginia are both pressing for advanced legislation. Every session of the Maryland Legislature sees laws passed increasing the territory to be freed from saloons. In the Middle West, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, the fight is raging. The liquor men, entrenched in large cities, pour their money into the county contests, but steadily the Anti-Saloon League is winning its way. Within the last year 130 elections in Ohio municipalities have resulted in 51 victories for the League. But perhaps the most interesting results have been obtained in Massachusetts. There the fight comes year after year in the cities, and now a majority of the cities of that State have banished the saloon. For fifteen years the city of Cambridge, with a population of 90,000, and the city of Summerville, immediately adjoining, with a population of 65,000, making a community of 155,000 people, have voted to give no license to safoons, and the majority has grown year by year. This year new cities were added to the no-license column. In Vermont and New Hampshire, the Anti-Saloon League has enforced the law so strictly that the liquor interests have decided to make a great fight to overthrow the law, and the battle is now being fought. Everywhere that the League is at work its principles and methods, when carried out, are found to be most helpful.

Besides the reports from the different States, the Convention considered the question of a closer union of the work throughout the country, and adopted some plans of government which it is hoped will accomplish that result. Congressional legislation was also carefully considered. At the Convention of 1901 the writer presented resolutions calling for an appropriation by the government to erect and equip suitable buildings at every army post for the recreation and amusement of the soldiers. This matter has been pressed by Rev. J. C. Whitwell, legislative superintendent, and Congress has appropriated $500,000 for that purpose. Up to the present the War Department has not erected the buildings. The report of the Secretary of War calling for the re-establishment of the saloon in the army on the ground that discipline could not be maintained without it, was given careful consideration. It is a shameful, almost disgraceful statement to make. Can it be true that the army of the United States is in such a condition that discipline cannot be maintained without the help of a bar-room? If so, it is a proof of the demoralization which has already been wrought by it, and not a reason for its continuance. The Convention demanded that the Secretary of War devote his energies to the building up of the morals of the soldiers by enforcing the present discipline, and by furnishing promptly the buildings ordered by Congress, rather than by attempting to prove that the saloon is a temperance society when conducted in the army.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

The addresses at the evening sessions were all helpful and inspiring. Dr. L. B. Wilson, the national president, in his annual address set forth the matters of greatest moment in the work of the past year, and gave a brief but comprehensive survey of the field.

The following, taken from the Star, is an abstract of the remainder of the address. In second paragraph every

"And, while I am blamin' no one but myself, I am glad tonight this saloon is on our side, for my own sake and for the sake of those who have been waitin' long to see me. But before I sit down I want to say that while I live I shall not forget that I owe my life to the man that took me that night to his own shack and put me in his own bed and met me next mornin' with an open hand, for I tell you I had sworn to God that mornin' would be my last."

Geordie's speech was characteristic. After a brief reference to the "mysterious ways o' Providence," which he acknowledged he might sometimes fail to understand, he went on to express his unqualified approval of the new saloon.

"It's a cozy place, an' there's nae sulphur about. Besides a' that," he went on enthusiastically, "it'll be a terrible savin' I've juist been countin'."

"You bet!" ejaculated a voice, with great emphasis.

"I've juist been countin'," went on Geordie, ignoring the remark and the laugh which followed, "an' it's an awfu' like money ye pit ower wi' the whusky. Ye see ye canna dae wi' aye bit glass. Ye mae hae twa or three at the verra least, for it's no verra forrit ye get wi' aye glass. But wi' yon coffee ye juist get a saxpence worth an' ye want nae mair."

There was another shout of laughter, which puzzled Geordie much.

"I dinna see the jowk, but I've slipped ower in whusky mair nor a hunner dollars."

Then he paused, looking hard before him and twisting his face into extraordinary shapes till the men looked at him in wonder.

"I'm rale glad o' this saloon, but it's ower late for the bed that canna be helpit the nee. He'll not be needin' help o' ours I doubt, but there are others." And he stepped abruptly and sat down, with applause following.

But when Slavin, our saloon keeper, rose to reply the men jumped up on the seats and yelled till they could yell no more. Slavin stood, evidently in trouble with himself, and finally broke out:

"It's speechless I am entirely. What's come to me I know not nor how it's come, but I'll do my best for you."

And then the yelling broke out again. I did not yell myself. I was too busy watching the varying lights in Mrs. Mayor's eyes as she looked from Craig to the yelling men on the benches and tables and then to Slavin, and I found myself wondering if she knew what it was that came to Slavin.

CHAPTER XI: THE TWO CALLS.

WITH the call to Mr. Craig I fancy I had something to do myself. The call came from a young congregation in an eastern city and was based partly upon his college record and more upon the advice of those among the authorities who knew his work in the mountains. But I flatter myself that my letters to friends who were of importance in that congregation were not without influence, for I was of the mind that the man who could handle Black Rock miners as he could was ready for something larger than a mountain mission. That he would refuse I had not imagined, though I ought to have known him better. He was but little troubled over it. He went with the call and the letters urging his acceptance to Mrs. Mayor. I was putting the last touches to some of my work in the room at the back of Mrs. Mayor's house when he came in. She read the letters and the call quietly and waited for him to speak.

"Well," he said, "should I go?"

She started and grew a little pale. His question suggested a possibility that had not occurred to her. That he could leave his work in Black Rock she had hitherto never imagined, but there was other work, and he was fit for good work anywhere. Why should he not go? I saw the fear in her face, but I saw more than fear in her eyes as for a moment or two she let them rest upon Craig's face. I read her story, and I was not sorry for either of them. But she was too much a woman to show her heart easily to the man she loved, and her voice was even and calm as she answered his question.

"Is this a very large congregation?"

"One of the finest in all the east," I put in for him. "It will be a great thing for Craig."

Craig was studying her curiously. I think she noticed his eyes upon her, for she went on even more quietly:

"It will be a great chance for work, and you are able for a larger sphere, you know, than poor Black Rock affords."

"Who will take Black Rock?" he asked.

"Let some other fellow have a try at it," I said. "Why should you waste your talents here?"

"Waste?" cried Mrs. Mayor indignantly.

"Well, 'bury,' if you like it better," I replied.

"It would not take much of a grave for that funeral," said Craig, smiling.

"Oh," said Mrs. Mayor, "you will be a great man, I know, and perhaps you ought to go now."

But he answered coolly: "There are fifty men wanting that eastern charge, and there is only one wanting Black Rock, and I don't think Black Rock is anxious for a change, so I have determined to stay where I am yet awhile."

Even my deep disgust and disappointment did not prevent me from seeing the sudden leap of joy in Mrs. Mayor's eyes, but she, with a great effort, answered quietly:

"Black Rock will be very glad and some of us very, very glad."

Nothing could change his mind. There was no one he knew who could take his place just now, and why should he quit his work? It annoyed me considerably to feel he was right. Why is it that the right things are so frequently unpleasant?

And if I had had any doubt about the matter next Sabbath evening would have removed it, for the men came about him after the service and let him feel in their own way how much they approved his decision, though the self sacrifice involved did not appeal to them. They were too truly western to imagine that any inducements the east could offer could compensate for his loss of the west. It was only fitting that the west should have the best, and so the miners took almost as a matter of course and certainly as their right that the best man they knew should stay with them. But there were those who knew how much of what most men consider worth while he had given up, and they loved him no less for it.

Mrs. Mayor's call was not so easily disposed of. It came close upon the other and stirred Black Rock as nothing else had ever stirred it before.

I found her one afternoon gazing vacantly at some legal documents spread out before her on the table and evidently overcome by their contents. There was first a lawyer's letter informing her that by the death of her husband's father she had come into the whole of the Mayor estates and all the wealth pertaining thereto. The letter asked for instructions and urged an immediate return with a view to a personal superintendence of the estates. A letter, too, from a distant cousin of her husband urged her immediate return for many reasons, but chiefly on account of the old mother, who had been left alone, with none nearer of kin than himself to care for her and cheer her old age.

With these two came another letter from her mother-in-law herself. The crabbled, trembling characters were even more eloquent than the words with which the letter closed:

"I have lost my boy, and now my husband is gone, and I am a lonely woman. I have many servants and some friends, but none near to me, none so near and dear as my dead son's wife. My days are not to be many. Come to me, my daughter. I want you and Lewis' child."

"Must I go?" she asked, with white lips.

"Do you know her well?" I asked.

"I saw her only once or twice," she answered, "but she has been very good to me."

"She can hardly need you. She has friends. And surely you are needed here."

She looked at me eagerly.

"Do you think so?" she said.

"Ask any man in the camp—Shaw, Nixon, young Winton, Geordie, Ask Craig," I replied.

"Yes, he will tell me," she said.

Even as she spoke Craig came up the steps. I passed into my studio and went on with my work, for my days at Black Rock were getting few, and many sketches remained to be filled in. Through my open door I saw Mrs. Mayor lay her letters before Mr. Craig, saying, "I have a call too." They thought not of me.

He went through the papers, carefully laying them down without a word while she waited anxiously, almost impatiently, for him to speak.

"Well," she asked, using his own words to her, "should I go?"

"I do not know," he replied. "That is for you to decide. You know all the circumstances."

"The letters tell all."

Her tone carried a feeling of disappointment. He did not appear to care. "The estates are large?" he asked.

"Yes, large enough—twelve thousand a year."

"And has your mother-in-law any one with her?"

"She has friends, but, as she says, none near of kin. Her nephew looks after the works—iron works, you know. He has shares in them."

"She is evidently very lonely," he answered gravely.

"What shall I do?" she asked, and I knew she was waiting to hear him urge her to stay, but he did not see or at least gave no heed.

"I cannot say," he repeated quietly. "There are many things to consider. The estates"—

"The estates seem to trouble you," she replied almost fretfully.

He looked up in surprise. I wondered at his slowness.

"Yes, the estates," he went on, "and tenants, I suppose; your mother-in-law, your little Marjorie's future, your own future."

"The estates are in capable hands, I should suppose," she urged, "and my future depends upon what I choose my work to be."

"But one cannot shift one's responsibilities," he replied gravely. "These estates, these tenants, have come to you, and with them come duties."

"I do not want them!" she cried.

"That life has great possibilities of good," he said kindly.

"I had thought that perhaps there was work for me here," she suggested timidly.

"Great work," he hastened to say. "You have done great work, but you will do that wherever you go. The only question is where your work lies."

"You think I should go," she said suddenly and a little bitterly.

"I cannot bid you stay," he answered steadily.

"How can I go?" she cried, appealing to him. "Must I go?"

How he could resist that appeal I could not understand. His face was cold and hard and his voice was almost harsh as he replied:

"If it is right, you will go, you must go."

Then she burst forth:

"I cannot go. I shall stay here. My work is here. My heart is here. How can I go? You thought it worth your while to stay here and work. Why should not I?"

The momentary gleam in his eyes died out, and again he said coldly:

"This work was clearly mine. I am needed here."

"Yes, yes!" she cried, her voice full of pain. "You are needed, but there is no need of me."

"Stop! Stop!" he said sharply. "You must not say so."

"I will say it, I must say it!" she cried, her voice vibrating with the intensity of her feeling. "I know you do not need me. You have your work, your miners, your plans. You need no one. You are strong. But," and her voice rose to a cry, "I am not strong by myself. You have made me strong. I came here a foolish girl, foolish and selfish and narrow. God sent me grief. Three years ago my heart died. Now I am living again. I am a woman now, no longer a girl. You have done this for me. Your life, your words, yourself—you have shown me a better, a higher, life than I had ever known before, and now you send me away."

She paused abruptly.

"Blind, stupid fool!" I said to myself.

He held himself resolutely in hand, answering carefully, but his voice had lost its coldness and was sweet and kind.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 53, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

SOME MUSINGS ANENT EPWORTH.

The oracle of Epworth has issued his ukase; let the Virginia Conference bow down before him. Selah!

And now, will you poor, simple-minded, short-sighted preachers of said Conference, who had the temerity to comment on the action of the great and only Epworth, please go and hide your abashed faces, and with your mouths in the dust and your hands on your mouths, cry out: "O, ignorant men that we are, with narrow horizon and little knowledge of the transfer doctrine which applies to one Church in Virginia, who shall deliver us from the bitter scorn and sarcasm and invective of the mouth-piece and oracle of Epworth!"

Let us imagine for a moment the action of Epworth's big official board of thirty members when it met just before the last Conference in order to select a preacher so as to be prepared to notify Bishop Duncan whom he should have transferred for them. The making of appointments by the Bishop and his council of presiding elders will do for other churches, but there are exceptions to all rules, and Epworth proposes to except to anything that it doesn't like or want.

The president of the board naturally announces the purpose for which they have met, it being understood that:—"No pent-up Virginia contracts our powers; The whole of Southern Methodism is ours."

There is no man in the Virginia Conference to be thought of in connection with the great work to be done here; and, therefore, being men of broad views and extended horizon, we will fly to the uttermost parts of the connection, if necessary, to find one of whom it may be said: "Thou art the man."

The stewards, all grave, sat in solemn conclave.

Surveying the big Methodist pie: One put in his thumb and pulled out a plum.

And said, what a smart steward am I!

And with unanimous voice the other twenty-nine cried out:

You are a smart steward, indeed you are;

Having soared to the west and plucked a bright star

From the scintillating galaxy of Methodist fame,

A man who is Smart both by nature and name.

"Well, brethren," says the president, "that settles the question, as all of us are suited, and therefore the Virginia Conference has nothing to do with the matter. We are Epworth; we have a broad horizon; we bring in transfers; we pay the freight; who dares question our action?"

And now a word to our critics: Just think for a moment what a state of affairs would prevail should any Bishop have the hardihood to disobey our instructions and send to us one of the preachers of the Virginia Conference. Why, the big bronze doors of Epworth would be closed, and although the Lord might be in His holy temple, we would take the utmost precaution to prevent Him seeing such a man as one of you ministering in our high-toned pulpit. Go to, you simple-minded men; you are back numbers; you haven't a broad horizon like we Epworthians have; you need to be transferred—and if others look upon you as we do, it would be well if the good Lord transferred you to the spirit land. You may be good enough for heaven, but are not fit for Epworth.

THE REEVES CASE.

Mr. Editor: Dr. R. N. Price, in the issue of your paper of November 25th, makes a statement concerning the case of Rev. John Reeves, incited by "a newspaper," and a letter which he received from a friend in Kentucky.

If Dr. Price based his article on information gleaned from this "newspaper and letter," then we do not hesitate to say that the authors of both were either ignorant of the facts or maliciously misrepresented them. But whatever may have been the sources of Dr. Price's information, a greater number of errors could not have been couched in the same amount of space. Dr. Price says: "Some three years ago a preacher of the Kentucky Conference was expelled from the Church on charges of immorality. He appealed to the General Conference, and the Committee on Appeals reversed the decision of the lower court, as the letter which I have received states, on legal grounds—that is to say, because the defendant was not permitted to testify in his own case."

Now, as I was Bro. Reeves' counsel, and prepared the papers for his appeal, I believe I know what was done by the Committee on Appeals, and why they did it.

First, Bro. Reeves was permitted to testify in his own case; he did testify in his own case, and the complaint that he could not testify was not mentioned in the grounds of appeal.

Second, the papers were prepared for a reversal on the merits of the case. We did not ask, nor intend to ask, for the case to be remanded for a new trial. We asked for a reversal on the ground that the accuser was not present at the trial, her affidavit was not produced, and her name was suppressed. This, of itself, would reverse any case on its merits before any intelligent court, civil or ecclesiastical.

But Dr. Price continues:

"The late Kentucky Conference found the man restored and among them. A motion was made to locate him, but the Bishop said: 'Wait till his case comes up regularly,' or words to that effect. When his name was called the motion was reversed, whereupon the Bishop informed the Conference that the man was not in their hands; he had transferred him to another Conference. He had opened a skylight, and the bird had flown."

This whole statement is absolutely false. The facts are as follows:

1. Reeves' name was called, and his character passed without a word of dissent.

2. Two days later a motion was made to locate him, which did not meet with a second. The Bishop simply ruled that the motion was out of order, and that the question must be brought up at the proper time.

3. In the mean time Reeves received a letter from Bishop Duncan asking him to come to the Columbia Conference. He then asked for a transfer that he might answer Bishop Duncan's call, and Bishop Morrison gave him the transfer. There was no trickery employed, and no "skylight opened." Reeves' character was passed, he was entitled to a transfer if he desired it, and the Bishop did not open a "skylight" in giving it to him.

Dr. Price then indulges in a few legal and moral reflections. He says:

1. "Legal grounds are not sufficient to reverse a case; it should have been remanded for a new hearing. A case should be reversed on its merits."

If Dr. Price can tell me the difference between "legal grounds and the merits of the case," then I will concede that he has made a discovery. If the merits of a case are not legal grounds, then no case ought ever to be reversed on its merits, because such action would be illegal.

But if by "legal grounds" Dr. Price means irregularities, technicalities, defective records, etc., then my only reply is, that the Committee on Appeals surely knew this much about ecclesiastical law.

Again, Dr. Price says: "When a case is reversed, and an expelled minister is restored, he returns to his Conference in good standing, and should not suffer in any way for what he is tried for."

In this statement I most fully and heartily concur. But how does the matter stand with Rev. John Reeves?

1. His case is reversed—reversed on its merits, because a case cannot be legally reversed on any other grounds.

2. He is restored, and returns to his Conference in good standing—and his character passes without a dissenting voice.

Then why should he "be made to suffer in any way because of the charges for which he was tried?" Look at his pursuers; questioning the wisdom and justice of our highest court, misrepresenting the action of one of our Bishops. After failing to locate the object of their hatred, they write private letters, publish newspaper communications, and prepare a document reeking with false statements concerning his case, and send it to every preacher in the Conference to which he transfers. They follow him two thousand miles away, and try to undo the work of the General Conference, nullify the appointment of a Bishop, and ruin and wreck the character of a man whom the highest court in our Church has declared to be innocent.

Now, let it be remembered that Bishop Duncan was the chairman of the Committee of Appeals. He heard the case fully set forth; he concurred in the verdict, and he it was who asked for Reeves' transfer, and gave him the best appointment in one of the Conferences over which he presided.

I shall not comment on this fact—it tells its own story; neither will I comment further on the case than to say that having been connected with it from the beginning, I know only too well how Reeves' enemies, like birds of prey, have pursued his every flutter and flight, and with merciless beak and claw they would rend his quivering blood and broken heart.

Dr. Price continues: "The law is defective, and should be amended. The dismissal and reception of ministers from one Conference should be made a matter of Conference action."

This may be true, but the Church does not think so. As far back as 1840 an attempt was made, by memorial, to take the power of transfer from the hands of the Bishop. And from time to time the General Conference has been memorialized to do the very thing contended for by Dr. Price. All efforts alike have failed; and right or wrong, this power is with the Bishops, and likely to remain there. And a transfer carries with it the endorsement of a Conference, which no man has a right to question.

But leaving the Reeves case, Dr. Price has this to say concerning the case of Rev. H. C. Morrison: "The trial and expulsion of Morrison was an infamy; but by a ruling of a long-headed Bishop, Morrison was restored to the Church and ministry."

Here is another statement that is not supported by the facts in the premises.

I represented the Church in the Morrison case, and was also Reeves' counsel when his character was arrested for maladministration, and I wish to say:

1. That the trial and expulsion of Morrison was not an infamy. Reeves presided at Morrison's trial, and when he was arrested for maladministration the specifications were—first, "the trial proceeded part of the time without a secretary"; second, "the minutes of the trial were not signed by the president."

The trial came up, and the man who preferred the charges and specifications was put on the stand, and admitted that "he was the secretary, who left before the trial was over, and took the minutes with him, one hundred miles away," and so did not give the president an opportunity to sign them.

2. The "ruling of a long-headed Bishop" had nothing whatever to do with Morrison's restoration to the Church and ministry. The Bishop made no ruling on any feature of the case. After the trial of Reeves had proceeded one day, and the witness mentioned above had made the humiliating confession that he was to blame for the absence of the secretary and the failure of Reeves to sign the minutes of the trial—that he had preferred charges against Reeves for failing to do a duty which he himself had rendered impossible then Dr. (now Bishop) Morrison came to me with a paper signed by Morrison and his counsel, in which he (Morrison) promised that in the future he would comply with the law of the Church, and Morrison was restored to the Church and ministry on the strength of this promise, and the charge against Reeves for maladministration was withdrawn.

Such is the exact history of these two cases, as the records clearly and fully show. But the inner history of these cases will never be known until the final court of heaven's chancery, when the venom and injustice of Reeves' tormentors will be fully revealed.

In the mean time Dr. Price and others should be careful how they write about a matter of which they know nothing, or if they know, better let them remember that God's thunderbolts are hot, that vengeance is His, and He will repay. GEO. H. MEARS.

P. S.—The facts as stated above by Bro. Mears are correct.

H. C. MORRISON (Bishop).

REPLY BY R. N. PRICE.

The Editor has kindly submitted the above to me, that my explanation may go along with it.

My principal authority for what I wrote about the Reeves case, though I did not mention his name, was a newspaper published in Louisville, Ky., entitled "The King's Herald." The number from which I obtained my information was dated October 15, 1902, and is signed "L. L. P.," which I take to be L. L. Pickett, the editor of the paper. The paper was forwarded to me by the Rev. W. D. Akers, a professor in Asbury College, Wilmore, Ky., and a member of Holston Conference, accompanied by a note showing that he was in sympathy with the statement of Bro. Pickett. Knowing Bro. Akers to be an honest, pious man, I credited Bro. Pickett's statements. There are, evidently, some lies or mistakes out; if lies, I am not responsible for their origination. I hereby request you, Mr. Editor, to forward copies of your issue, containing Mr. Mears' article and my reply, to Bros. Pickett and Akers, that they may have opportunity to take care of themselves.

I hereby beg Bishop Morrison's pardon, and say that I am sorry that he has been misrepresented, and am glad to believe that he has been. I am glad to believe that he did not transfer Mr. Reeves till his character had been passed.

Mr. Mears is not satisfied with setting me right on what he holds to be the facts in the case; but he gets a little sarcastic when he comments on my remarks: "Legal grounds are not sufficient to reverse a case," etc., and says: "If Dr. Price can tell the difference between legal grounds and the merits of the case, then I will concede that he has made a discovery." Well, sir; if he will offer a reward for a new discovery, I shall put in a claim for it.

When exceptions are taken by either party in a trial in a lower court to the steps taken in the case—that is to say, if it is claimed that the proper legal steps have not been taken, then the case may be appealed on the law in the case; and if the appellate court decides that the trial in the court below was not regular, or that the proper legal steps were not taken, it is the duty of that court to remand the case for a new hearing. But if no exceptions are taken to the legality of the trial in the court below, or if these exceptions are overruled in the higher court, the case should not be sent back for a new hearing, but the judgment of the court below should be either confirmed or reversed. Reversing a case on legal grounds is reversing it because the law has not been complied with in the proceedings of the lower court. Reversing it on the law and evidence in the case is reversing it on its merits.

I have no disposition to recant or modify my opinion that the law should be so changed that ministers shall be dismissed from one Conference and received by another by Conference vote. So much of a Democrat am I; and this opinion did not grow out of the Reeves case; I have held it for many years.

I wish here also to reassert my remark about the Morrison case. From beginning to end, it was, with the exception of his final acquittal, a blot upon the escutcheon of Methodism: it was a disgrace to every man who took part in hounding down that good man, Henry C. Morrison, whose crime consisted in trying to save sinners and get Christians sanctified. Bro. Morrison was invited to assist in a union meeting in Texas; he went; a Southern Methodist preacher in charge of a station in a town near by served a notice on him to disconnect himself with the meeting, which Morrison very properly declined to do. He was then put under arrest by a man that had no jurisdiction over him; and he was tried by a committee illegally appointed, and suspended from the ministry. Bro. Morrison's pastor in Kentucky wisely refused to recognize the suspension; and the case came up in Morrison's Quarterly Conference in Kentucky, de novo. The charge, as I now remember it, was preaching at the meeting in Texas after being forbidden by the pastor who had a congregation near by; these are not the words of the charge, but the gist. The charge, in its very nature, could only involve an impropriety, and could not reasonably be construed into a crime sufficient to exclude a man from the kingdom of grace and glory. He was not accused of immorality. But he was proceeded against as though he had been accused of immoral conduct. In all cases of improper conduct, the New Testament and the Methodist Discipline require that the offender shall be subjected to the first and second admonition before the infliction of punishment. These steps had not been taken. The process was the same as the Discipline directs in cases of immorality; and the punishment was the same. It was capital punishment for what could only be construed into a misdemeanor. It was as if a man were hanged as high as Haman for hunting on posted grounds. Promising to keep the law on Morrison's part was all right; but he had already done that. There was no law by which he could be expelled from the Church for attending a holiness meeting contrary to the mandamus of a neighboring pastor. The men who wished to stamp out holiness evangelization practically acknowledged that there was no law to prohibit a preacher from preaching in the vicinity of a church if the pastor forbade by introducing and having passed a bill to that effect in the General Conference of 1898, and that was after the Morrison case had been finally adjudicated.

The Conference did well to restore Morrison to the Church and ministry, as he had not been lawfully ousted. The presiding elder who tried the case ought to have been cashiered for making a case of misdemeanor a case of crime, or for allowing a man to be tried for improper conduct (sic) as though he had been guilty of a crime.

As to the Reeves case, the presiding officer who allowed a man to be tried on allegations without the corpus de- licti—that is to say, without the body, substance or foundation of the offence, erred. It was a legal error—an irregularity in his administration; at least, so it seems to me, and for that reason the appellate court should have remanded the case for a new hearing. The judgment should not have been reversed because of irregularities in the trial in the Annual Conference; if reversed at all, it should have been reversed on the ground that the trial being legal and regular, the charge had not been sustained, or that it was not sufficient, when sustained, to justify the penalty of expulsion.

It is due Bro. Pickett that I should say that I was mistaken as to the ground or reversal alleged by him. In his article he said: "This was done on a mere technicality—because the injured party was not brought into the trial as a witness, or something to that effect." By "injured party" I understood him to mean the accused (Reeves); whereas it is now plain to me that he meant the unfortunate woman in the case. The mistake was mine. The denial of Bro. Mears caused me to scrutinize the language of Bro. Pickett more closely, and I find that I misinterpreted his words.

But when the General Conference acquitted Reeves, he was returned to his Conference in good standing, and the passage of his character and transfer were all right, so far as I know anything to the contrary; and he ought to be permitted to live down in the far West the unsavory reputation he may have contracted in Kentucky, whether he was guilty or innocent.

Morristown, Tenn., December 4, 1902.

FROM BRO. HOBDAV.

I wish to say a few words in reference to our late Conference. But let me say, and let it be plainly understood, that while I shall say some plain things, I have no wish to offend, and not a word will be written with malicious intent. I simply wish to let others see themselves as some of their brethren see them.

First of all, Bishop Duncan's presidency was unsatisfactory. I say nothing of his rulings in the chair in open session, but I mean in its results. The return of the same Bishop for several consecutive sessions has proven in his case to be a sad failure. The trouble originated in Norfolk, intensified in Newport News, came near producing an explosion in Richmond. The continuance of the district lines, despite the protests of our people, and the continuance of the same men in the presiding eldership over the twice declared wish of our body, was not the action of a broad-minded statesman seeking the good of all, but looked rather like the action of a tyrant determined to have his way, right or wrong, let who may suffer.

What a travesty on justice was his action on transfers! We have no law whatever in words on this question, and I hold that any action on this line, if tested, would be declared illegal. The Bishops formerly, guided by written law, made transfers for the good of the cause and Church as they saw it. Now, without law, they make them, judging from action in our Conference, for the good of the transfer. If he had a right to make a transfer, why did he announce that there was a charge in California that would pay $1,000, and call for a volunteer? Why did he not select a man and send him? Why did he not send one of those who came to us, already crowded? The day is passed, judging from present action, when the good of the Church is considered. It is the man, or men, who has, or is supposed to have, money, that is listened to. Poor charges have no rights. Independent men and charges are punished in their appointments. Let me make a suggestion. Stretch the transfer business a little more, and transfer the churches that call their pastors, so that all of them throughout the Southern church may be thrown together into one Conference, and be known as the Giraffe Conference. Such churches have the right name (Giraffe). I was looking at the picture of one (Giraffe) not long since. His head was in the top of a tree, and his hinder parts near the ground. A sort of declined plane, down which would roll things disagreeable to the head. I thought how true the lesson. We have no general fund for our superannuates, save in theory. Each Conference takes care of its own. A giraffe church calls a man from a distance. He dies, or becomes disabled, and he rolls from the head, down over the tail of the animule, and falls plump into the superannuated fund of a Conference that knows nothing of him. Ecclesiastical carpet-bagism is just now at premium, but the day will come when it will get its just deserts.

As to the elders twice asked to step down. Now, can you ask for our respect? How can you expect our confidence? You treat our protest with contempt, and declare by your action that we are a set of fools, who don't know what is better for us. Let me recommend the following texts, and ask that you ponder, pray over, and preach from them: Matt. 7: 12: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." Matt. 23: 12: "And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased, and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." I. Peter 5: 3: "Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock." (Italics mine.)

LESSON XII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 21.

Text of the Lesson. Luke ii, 8-20, a Christmas Lesson—Memory Verses, 10, 11—Golden Text, Luke ii, 11. Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

8. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

The previous verse speaks of the Son of God, made of a woman, made under the law (Gal. iv, 4); the fulfillment of Isa. vii, 14, "a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and shall call His name Immanuel." This verse sets before us a night scene on earth, shepherds watching over their flocks to save them from the destroyer. The little babe laid in the manger because there was no room in the inn is none other than the good, great and chief Shepherd of Scripture who came to give His life that He might save His sheep from the destroyer (John x, 10, 11; Heb. xiii, 20, 21).

9-12. Fear not, for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

Although the angel of the Lord was sent from heaven to these humble shepherds with these great, glad tidings, the world neither knew nor cared anything about it. God made the world's ruler to take part in fulfilling His will to bring about the birth of this Child at Bethlehem, but he was wholly unconscious of it. The world in its blindness and madness is today going its own way, as it thinks, and seemingly doing as it pleases, but God in heaven is working all things after the counsel of His own will and making all things ready for the coming again of Him who was the Babe in Bethlehem. His throne on earth will be David's throne at Jerusalem, and all kings and nations will honor Him (Eph. i, 11; Jer. iii, 17; Isa. ix, 6, 7; Ps. lxxii, 11). I trust that all who teach this lesson will speak of these things and show to all whom they can reach that unless all believers are doing all they can to make the tidings known of the Saviour who has come and of His great salvation they are not interested in His coming again.

13, 14. Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men.

Thus said a multitude of the heavenly host who accompanied the angel who spoke to the shepherds, and we think of the millions of angels who will yet say, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing (Rev. v, 12). The aim of all angelic service is to bring glory to God, and the redeemed on earth are so to live that God in all things may be glorified (1 Cor. vi, 20; x, 31; 1 Pet. iv, 11; Phil. ii, 11).

15, 16. Let us now go even unto Bethlehem and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

There was no questioning, there were no doubts, there was no hesitation in acting out their faith. They believed all that was told them; they went with haste and found all things as the Lord's messenger had said. Elizabeth said of Mary, "Blessed is she which believed that there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord" (Luke i, 45, margin). Paul said concerning the angel's message in the storm at sea, "I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me," and so it came to pass (Acts xxvii, 25, 46). I do believe that all that is written in this blessed book which is not yet fulfilled shall be fulfilled as literally as were all the prophecies concerning the humiliation and first coming of our blessed Lord. Every purpose of God shall be fulfilled in Christ (Isa. xlv, 21; Jer. ii, 29).

17. And when they had seen it they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child.

Joy filled their own hearts, and joyfully they spread the tidings and told simply what they had seen and heard. If we have not yet been made exceedingly joyful by the glad tidings concerning Jesus so that we cannot but speak of it, how far we must be from the experience of those shepherds and of those of whom we read in John iv, 28, 29; Acts iv, 20; viii, 4; 1 John i, 3, 4?

18, 19. And all they that heard it wondered. . . . But Mary kept all these things and pondered them in her heart.

Better to ponder than merely to wonder. It is not wonder, but faith, that brings the blessing. The word preached does not profit unless it is mixed with faith in them that hear it (Heb. iv, 2). Mary, like Daniel, kept the matter in her heart (Dan. vii, 28). If the truth is laid up in the heart and prayerfully pondered, we shall receive the light in due time.

20. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.

You could not shut them up any more than you could stop a volcano. It was in them, and, like Jeremiah, they could not keep still about it (Jer. xx, 9). They had caught the spirit of the angels and praise God they must, and their testimony was all about Jesus. If we, in our ordinary vocations, serve the Lord, as they were evidently doing while watching their flocks, He will show us greater things as we can bear them and as He sees we will make good use of them. They also remind us of many shepherds watching over the souls under their care in this night of the world's history and daily expecting a call from the skies to summon them to the marriage of Him who was once a Babe in Bethlehem. May He, the great Shepherd, work in us all those things that are pleasing in His sight and so hasten His kingdom (Heb. xiii, 21; 11 Pet. iii, 12; R. V. and margin).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic for the Week Beginning Dec. 21, "Christmas: Its Message and Motive"—Text, Luke ii, 1-20; John iii, 14-17.

"That whosoever believeth may in Him have eternal life."

From Anglo-Saxon customs and ancient times comes much of the practice of the great festival of the winter solstice. The sun has reached his farthest southern limit and wheeled on his return to the northlands. From ages beyond record our ancestors kept this time as a season of festivity and feasting. Great logs for the hearth fire, wild beasts for food, evergreens for decorating home and God's house, greetings and good cheer marked the occasion as the grandest of all festivals.

It was wise in the early Christian missionaries to recognize the worth and deep significance of this annual Yuletide observance and give to the Anglo-Saxon heathen practices new and better meanings. Under their teaching it became the festival of Christ's birth and the most joyous of all Christian holy days. Better than the sun returning to the frostbound land was the fact of the coming of the God Man to earth with heavenly salvation for all men.

Our custom of making gifts and all the other observances which have grown up and around Christmas and to which the hearts of the young cling so fondly have much to commend them beside the momentary gratification of kindly impulses. Beyond all the benefit which the business of making and trading gets from this season we prize the rehearsing of the Christ story. The wonderment grows greater as the years pass. Childhood takes the precious narrative so eagerly and realistically! Why should not angels come from heaven and sing to listening shepherds? Have not angels always been near and dear to the heart of childhood, which has no difficulty in believing in them and can almost see and hear them at all times.

To the young people Christmas means somewhat more than it used to mean. It holds vaster truth, deeper purity and reaches of love unfathomed, perhaps unfathomable. It is promise of unutterable riches and revelation unceasing. It beckons into years yet to come with marvelous possibilities of achievement and enjoyment. It means the limitless unfolding of the Christ life in self and in society—all possibility of all good.

To the middle aged it speaks no less decisively, even if more soberly. The virgin birth and angel song may be held less clearly than once, but the eternal life in prospect comes nearer, and the hopelessness of the struggle of earth without the Christ help presses more deeply home to the soul.

To the aged ones the Christmas time brings a mellowing influence to the spirit, a mystical touch to the faith almost childlike in its simplicity. Angel songs and mother sweetness mean more than in all the bygone years. Heaven lies not far away.

To all the Christmas message is eternal life for you if you believe and love Him who is life eternal.

Real Joy.

Real joy is as sacred and divine a thing as there is. You know that it is true that we may if we choose begin to enter upon our inheritance of eternal things now, here, in this life. Especially is this the case with this divine gift of gladness of the soul. Do not rest content with any more small, finite, temporary thing and call that joy; it is some more passing earthly elevation of spirits. That is merely a selfish impression. That is not connected with any feeling of regret for our imperfection, as true joy must ever be. In true joy there can be no selfishness. It is the delight that comes from consciousness of the nearness of God, consciousness of love to Him, consciousness of sin forgiven, consciousness of living for the good of our brothers and sisters of the human family.—Sinclair.

Satisfy the Heart.

If with the heart a man believes unto righteousness, his intellect will be drawn as his heart leads. It will be a valuable servant of faith and truth. But if it is principally with the head or intellect that a man believes there is not much heart in his belief or faith in his heart. His may be the religion of scholarship, but not of experience. And while natural reason or science is his authority for the spiritual realm his heart is unsatisfied and his intellect much the less enriched.—Friend.

Pleasure in Religion.

A religion whose tendency is to make the possessor disagreeable is not the one commended of the church. Pleasure is an ordinance of God. It is a lily planted in the desert, and we thank Him for it. We may grow away from its form and color, but the memory of it remains, like the notes of an old song, in the silence of other and sadder years.—Presbyterian Journal.

A Way to Avoid Trouble.

How much trouble he avoids who does not look to see what his neighbor says or does or thinks, but only to what he does himself, that it may be just and pure!—Marcus Aurelius.

Excuses.

Beware of excuses when you feel prompted to pray. Pour forth the longings of your heart to God and you will experience great lightening of your load.—Presbyterian.

Endurance.

It profits naught to prate about our wrong And chatter of our wound when we are hurt; If we the wrong and wound cannot avert, To silently endure is to grow strong. —Susie M. Best.

THE SINS OF LIQUOR

KING ALCOHOL ARRAIGNED BY A WELL KNOWN PREACHER.

Strong Drink a Defamer and a Deceiver—Lying the Natural Weapon of the Demon of the Dram—The Cure of the Curse.

Intoxicating beverages are the bane of everything that is good. They are a defaming, deceiving and destroying foe of men, women and children. They are an ever spreading curse wherever and whenever used. We do not say that alcohol is the curse of curses in our world, but we do dare to affirm that it is a matchless enemy of the best interests of mankind when taken as a beverage, said the Rev. John Lindsay Withrow in a recent sermon. It should be enough to make a black angel weep, if demons can weep, to hear temperance people defend tippling in others. A man recently said to me:

"Whisky has been my best friend. When I was a boy, the folks prophesied that I would die of consumption before I reached manhood. But here I am past thirty because I keep soaked all the time."

Poor, degraded wretch! We wonder not at thee defending the drink demon. But for a sober mind—and there are some of that class—to act as defender and advocate for intoxicating beverages is too vicious to picture fully in words. On what flimsy, foolish lines they conduct the defense. They say, "Anyhow alcoholic liquors, brandy, whisky, gin, beer, are essentials for stimulants in many cases for acute attacks of heart failing illnesses. So are other deadly poisons of vital value when medically administered. But who has patience with the sophistry, who can have at hearing an argument in favor of making deadly poisons things of daily indulgences?

Strong drink is a defamer. It is also a deceiver. Nothing else known makes liars of such skill and shamelessness as strong drink. The word of a drinking man is not worth the atmospheric air that is used to speak it. The enormity of his lies, who is a drinker, can be accounted for only by supposing that alcohol is the greatest deadening of conscience. The demon of the dram depends upon deception, and that is lying. Let any one count up in how many ways intoxicating drinks deceive. They fool their victim to think he is the only sober man around; meanwhile he "reels like a drunken man."

The drunkard is made to think himself rich when his rags and wretched state stare at you. Intoxicating drinks assume to have no power and say the drinker can quit them whenever he will. At the same moment the fiend of the bottle feeds the flesh with a fuel that he knows will burn to the lowest hell.

"Pity me—oh, for heaven's sake, pity me!" said a slave of alcoholic drinks as I was talking to him of the disgraceful power drinking had acquired over him. "You know nothing of the fire of thirst in my throat. I would be willing to go to hell as soon as I had drunk it if some one would give me all the rum I thirst after. I cannot quit. God knows I cannot quit!" "But," said I, "once you could have stopped." "Possibly; but before I dreamed of danger it had me, and I am going to hell." He reached that depth by being deceived. And millions, many of them, have met with the same fearful fate. Intoxicants are drilled and disciplined deceivers. They seem to be impersonated imps of everything evil. Incarnate devils could not do worse than does the wine cup, the beer stein, the whisky jug and the brandy bottle in deceiving men.

What can be done to stay this defamer, this deceiver, this destroyer of the bodies and souls and substance of men? Legislate against it? Go on and get the most that may be in the form of statute. Shall we urge the pledge upon the young? Yes; it may guard some. Shall we cry aloud and spare not, that the magnitude of this monstrous immorality may be made known in all its odious ugliness? Yes; let the trumpet blast wake the deafest ear. But if all this is done the effect will not be as salutary as is certain to be realized if the principles of the Christian religion are powerfully and persistently taught.

The Temperate Jews.

In an article in the International Monthly on "Anti-Semitism in Europe" Rabbi Gottheil of New York dwells on the virtue of temperance which characterizes the Jews wherever they are placed and makes them an object of envy to their non-Jewish neighbors. The Jew's home, says Rabbi Gottheil, is not the church, but rather the church is in the home. The Jew's salvation is in nowise dependent upon rabbi or synagogue, but upon wife and children. The deepest roots of the Jewish faith rest on domestic soil. No man becomes a drunkard with wife and children and aged parents near him for guardian angels. The Jew, says Rabbi Gottheil, is a natural ally of the temperance advocates, and if he is not in their ranks it is simply because he never knew from experience the need of that reformation.

A Big Temperance Year.

"It has been a great year for temperance," says the Rev. Alexander P. Doyle of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America. "The ordinary, natural growth of our organization has been about 3,000 a year. One year, and that was the jubilee year, the addition to our membership was 9,938, but the past year we have pledged and organized into societies and affiliated with the national union 10,436 new recruits. The union now numbers nearly 100,000 members."

The following, from a Norfolk dispatch to the Richmond Times, illustrates well the growing troubles of Virginia saloon keepers: "Saloon keeper Capps and three negro women were fined $10 this morning for being in a saloon. This is a new ordinance for bidding women from a place, even a grocery, where liquor is sold. This fine is appealed to the Corporation Court in order to make a test case of the Southgate amendment to the Good-rich ordinance for the regulation of the saloons."

The Union Central LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

NATIONAL ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

sentence contains the text of a strong paragraph in the address:

"We do not by one hair's breadth lower our standard. We declare now as before that we seek the suppression of the saloon where rum, vice and poverty are bound in a shameless alliance, in the villages and rural communities, in the army posts, in immigrant stations, and in the capitol itself. We are neither satisfied with the result already achieved nor affrighted by the hostility developed, nor appalled by defeats which we have suffered.

"The League has entered into the contest to win, and by the help of God it will win. Success is the secret of confidence. It is costly to be inefficient. We have the key to the situation. We send out to the last member of the League to-day the message, 'accomplish something.' It is better to gain the smallest instalment of the real millennium than to make some pretentious endeavor and gain nothing. Let us go for what we can get and get what we go for. The League may not be able to do everything, but everywhere it can do something."

This utterance, like all of Dr. Wilson's addresses on this subject, showed a clear apprehension of the facts and principles involved, and the ability to state them in a strong and convincing manner. The League workers are all glad to have such a man as their national president.

ARMY CANTEN.

Another important address was that of Rev. E. C. Dinwiddie, on the army canteen. After showing the fact that the army has a most serious temperance problem to handle, as the official reports show that from 10 to 35 per cent. of the men in various regiments drink to excess habitually, Secretary Dinwiddie declared that not a single proposition had been advanced by those in authority in the War Department during the past four years for the improvement of temperance conditions, except the institution of the beer saloon in connection with the army.

On the other hand, people on the outside, who have had both occasion and opportunity to study this question thoroughly, have advanced three reasonable propositions: First, that the official army saloon, which General Daggett truthfully said affords a constant opportunity for all men to drink, and a strong temptation for many to contract the habit upon entering the service, should be suppressed, as Congress has done; second, to supply the men with proper places for recreation and amusement in connection with the various army posts, and thus relieve the monotony of routine military life, allowing men to have those comforts without resorting to the outside saloon; third, all the balance of the work necessary to improve the morale of the army and increase temperance can be effected by disciplinary orders from commandants, and, if necessary, from the department itself. He insisted that the canteen during the twelve years of its existence had developed liquor habits among many men, and more time is needed to bring about a change under the present law. In our next issue a paper, adopted by the Convention on the subject of the canteen, will be published.

REDEMPTION OF CAMBRIDGE.

A very inspiring address was that of Dr. David N. Beach, of Boston, on the "Redemption of Cambridge." No synopsis can do justice to the address. It was pressed full of facts. He said that the exclusion of the saloon from Cambridge has produced far-reaching results during the past fifteen years. The increase in the city's population, he stated, has almost doubled, the building operations have been doubled and the valuation of property has also increased. He declared further that the deposits in the savings banks by the laboring people had been vastly augmented, and the general prosperity of the people is much greater. More shoes, clothing and groceries are sold now than was the case when the saloons were in Cambridge, and the tone of the city, he said, was much higher.

But the greatest fact of all is that for fifteen years, year after year, the city has increased its majority against the saloon, and the law is enforced in a community larger than any community in the State of Virginia. This is an "ounce of fact," which overturns all the theories and wild talk of various newspaper editors and liquor advocates that the law cannot be enforced. It can be enforced if there is a man in the Mayor's chair and a man at the head of the police department who respects his oath of office. Hon. Wm. E. Russell, afterward Governor, was Mayor of Cambridge the first year the law went into effect; he announced that he would enforce it, if it required every officer on the force, and if he had to swear in every citizen as a special constable to do it. And he did enforce it, and the good work has continued.

It is hoped that Dr. Beach may be present at our Convention in Richmond.

NATIONAL OFFICERS.

At the last session it was announced that the next annual meeting of the national organization will be held in Washington, some time in December of 1903. The report of the nominating committee was submitted and officers of the National League were elected as follows:

President, Rev. Dr. Luther B. Wilson, Washington, D. C.; vice-presidents, David J. Burrell, of New York; Bishop J. N. Hamilton, of California; Rev. Dr. F. D. Power, of Washington, D. C.; Prof. E. W. B. Curry, of Ohio; Judge Charles A. Pollard, of North Dakota; Bishop C. B. Galloway, of Mississippi; Rev. Father James M. Cleary, of Minneapolis; general superintendent, Dr. Howard H. Russell, of New York; legislative superintendent, Dr. E. C. Dinwiddie, of Washington, D. C.; recording secretary, S. E. Nicholson, of Baltimore; more; corresponding secretary, James L. Ewin, of Washington, D. C.; treasurer, D. H. Carroll, of Baltimore.

Additional members of the executive committee—Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins, Philadelphia; Dr. I. K. Funk, New York; Rev. James Cannon, Jr., Virginia; Col. E. F. Ritter, Indiana; Mr. Clinton Smith, Washington, D. C.; Representative C. Q. Terrell, of Massachusetts; G. W. Howxhurst, Falls Church, Va.; Francis M. Bradley, Washington, D. C.

The Committee on Resolutions presented its report, which was adopted by a rising vote, and is as follows:

Resolved, first, That we record this expression of our gratitude to Almighty God for the many manifestations of His blessing upon our work; and, accepting it as a token of His pleasure, we pledge ourselves to renewed diligence in further prosecution of the work as seems to accord with best wisdom under the leading of the Holy Spirit.

Resolved, second, That we hail with supreme satisfaction the call of the five Years' Meeting of Friends in America, held at Indianapolis, Ind., last October 21st to 27th, for a Convention of delegates from all the religious denominations, to be held at the city of Washington, D. C., in March, 1906, to consider methods of dealing with the liquor traffic. We heartily concur in its plea that all Christian bodies should unite for the abolition of the liquor evil, and that all should pray for divine wisdom to guide this great work. We second the call, and recommend that all the various Church bodies respond heartily in accordance therewith, and we trust that this shall be a means towards bringing the entire Church into solid united array and power against this great foe to mankind.

Resolved, third, That our fundamental purpose is the suppression of the saloon. Our method of attack upon the saloon will necessarily vary in the different States for the reason that the liquor laws of the several States are different. Our uniform principles, however are: (1) Agitation to arouse and build up public sentiment against the saloon; (2) law enforcement, to secure the full benefit of the laws which we already have; (3) legislation, to secure in the various States better and stronger laws. Resolved, That to accomplish these ends we urge upon all voters the necessity of taking an active interest in politics and securing the election of men by our well-known non-partisan methods, who will not only make, but enforce, laws for the preservation of public morals. The ballot box is the seat of the saloon's power in this country, and also the hope of our relief. If we would control legislation in the future, we must concentrate the good morals of the various States at the ballot box in large enough numbers to defeat any public official who betrays the public welfare by allying himself with the saloon. Intelligence and morality being the two corner-stones of the temple of liberty, any institution or business which impairs or destroys either of these is essentially traitorous to the best interests of American life. The saloon hinders intelligence and destroys morals. We demand, therefore, that the men who manage our political affairs shall not manage them in the interest of the saloon.

Resolved, fourth, That we urge our State superintendents and League workers to place the League work on the highest possible vantage ground: First, by working wisely and persistently to make the League in every place the official representative of the various denominations, and of all other temperance advocates and organized tions in the fight against the liquor traffic; and second, by compelling the regularly elected officers of the State, wherever possible, to see that the laws are enforced, rather than by taking upon the League itself the work of enforcing the laws.

Resolved, fifth, That we hereby express our high appreciation of the action of Congress in appropriating $500,000 to erect and to equip building at the various army posts for the purpose of furnishing suitable places for recreation and amusement for the soldiers; that we urge that this work so well begun be continued till a sufficient appropriation has been made to erect and to equip a suitable building at every army post; that we furthermore urge that a regular sum be appropriated every year to properly maintain this great work, and that the War Department take such action as will speedily and permanently carry out the wishes of the American people and the action of Congress expressive of those wishes in this matter, and that the War Department is urged to enforce the discipline which inheres in our military system, rather than to excuse violation of discipline because of the abolition of the beer feature of the post exchange.

Resolved, sixth, That as the representative of a great multitude of the intelligent and temperate people of the United States, we urge the Congress of the United States to take such action as will prevent the sale of liquor on any property of the government, and thus completely sever the connection of the government with the liquor traffic.

Resolved, seventh, That we commend the bill introduced by Representative Rixey, of Virginia, which bill forbids the government of the United States from granting license for the operation of a distillery in any district of any State where the State law forbids the granting of any liquor license.

Resolved, eighth, That we urge our Leagues in the several States to take up immediately an active campaign for the enactment of laws in every State forbidding the granting of any kind of liquor licenses within three miles of any United States army post.

Resolved, ninth, That we hereby extend our thanks to the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia, and to any and all others, including the pastors and members of the Wesley Methodist Episcopal and the Calvary Baptist churches, for the comfort and convenience so hospitably accorded us in the holding of the Convention.

The congregation of Wesley Methodist Episcopal church, occupied their handsome new edifice on Halifax street for the first time Sunday morning—worshipping in the lecture room. A large congregation was present, and the services were of an interesting character. Special music had been arranged, and appropriate and congratulatory addresses were delivered by Rev. S. C. Hatcher, Rev. H. M. Hope, Rev. E. P. Parham, and the pastor, Rev. J. A. Thomas. The new church, when completed, will seat 800 people. Petersburg Cor. Dispatch.

Religious News.

Our new pastor, Rev. J. S. Wallace and wife, arrived here Friday morning and preached his introductory sermon last Sunday morning. His audience was favorably impressed. We hope he may find a cordial welcome among our people, and that his efforts here may be productive of much good.—Northern Neck News.

Rev. Robert P. Lumpkin, pastor of Epworth Methodist church, preached to large congregations at both services on Sunday. His morning text was taken from Psalm 137: 5, 6, and at night from Matthew 5: 8.

Since Mr. Lumpkin has been pastor of Epworth the congregations which have greeted him are larger than for years past, and the membership is on a steady increase, five additions by letter being received at the morning service.

The Sunday school reported at the monthly meeting of the Methodist schools in Clay Street church Sunday afternoon twenty-five new scholars during the month of November.

The church and school is now in a flourishing condition.—Dispatch.

The congregation of Wright Memorial Methodist church last night tendered a reception to their pastor, Rev. George H. McFaden, and to Rev. Dr. J. Powell Garland, the new presiding elder of Portsmouth district.

The affair was held in the lecture room of the church, and the large building was filled. After the opening prayer a programme of music and recitations were rendered, and then came the addresses, leading off with an address of welcome to the two ministers by Mr. John J. King, a member of the board of stewards. Mr. King made a finished address on the subject of "Methodism and Its Greeting," which was responded to in kind by Rev. Mr. McFaden and Dr. Garland. Dainty refreshments were served by the ladies of the church at the conclusion of the programme, which consisted of the singing of the hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," a piano duo by Miss Gaskins and Mrs. Etheridge, a vocal solo by Miss Virlnelson and Miss Weaver, piano solo by Miss Lelia White and a recitation by Miss Alice Brownley. The reception was presided over by Mr. C. A. McLean, chairman of the board of stewards.—Virginian-Pilot.

At the Laurel Street Methodist church a large congregation heard the Rev. Dr. H. E. Johnson preach on the duty of man to preserve the Sabbath and keep it holy.

The larger portion of Dr. Johnson's sermon dealt with that much-discussed and much-vexed feature of the subject in the relation of the State to the Sabbath. He said in part:

"This attempt to abolish the Sabbath as a day of holy rest is a cruel assault on the rights of man in the name of liberty. This wrong can only be prevented by the strong hand of civil power."

Dr. Johnson then went on to argue for the right and duty of the State to protect the Sabbath. He sharply defined the word, declaring that by protection he meant not an enforced observance of the religious features, but the preservation of its quiet and order. Illustrating the distinction, Dr. Johnson pointed out that the State claims no right to say to every citizen on election day, "Thou shalt vote," but the State exercises the right to say that no intoxicating liquors shall be sold so that the peace and quiet of the day may not be disturbed.

Following out this line, Dr. Johnson said the State should protect the Sabbath because—first, it is a great educational factor; second, it is a promoter of good order; third, it promotes health. He discussed each point, declaring finally that the law of the Sabbath is incorporated in the physical constitution of men and animals.—Times.

CHANCELLOR RESIGNS.

On account of ill health Bishop John F. Hurst, the chancellor of the American University, has resigned that position. Having been the founder of the university, and for eleven years the active head, the withdrawal of Bishop Hurst was received with sincere regret by his associates on the board of trustees in the semi-annual session at the office of the university in the Glover building. Bishop Hurst was elected chancellor emeritus.

Bishop Charles C. McCabe, who has been vice chancellor, was elected chancellor, and Bishop A. W. Wilson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, vice chancellor.—Washington Star.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

The Methodist preachers' meeting at Cumberland Street church yesterday morning was very largely attended, the pastors of all the churches in the three cities being present save one. Rev. J. Powell Garland, D. D., presiding elder of the Portsmouth district, was present for the first time, and was warmly greeted by his brother ministers.

The meeting was called to order by the new president, Rev. W. Asbury Christian. The opening prayer was made by Rev. J. W. Stiff, of LeKies Memorial church, Atlantic City ward.

THE CITY MISSION.

Rev. W. R. Proctor, chairman of the committee to investigate and report on the city mission, which has been conducted under the auspices of the Home Mission societies of the Methodist congregations of Norfolk, reported that the committee had made a thorough investigation of the work and had found that the past year with the mission had been the most prosperous in its history, but that the greatest hindrance to the further progress of the work was its financial embarrassment. He thought that the work was of such a character and of such importance to the Methodist Church, under whose fostering care it had been continued, that something ought to be done to keep it alive.

The report was received and adopted. After the receiving of the above report the following resolution, offered by Mr. Proctor, was unanimously adopted: Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to consider the advisability of continuing the missionary work of the city mission. # TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presby-
terian Church, Chicago

Chicago. Sympathy and sound advice are given to worried, harassed men and women in this sermon by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, on the text Ecclesiastes xii, 5, "The grasshopper shall be a burden."

A unique text, capable of many different interpretations. Some suppose the Solomonic "burden" of the grasshopper, or, more strictly speaking, of the eastern locust, refers to the nagging pains of the chronic dyspeptic. The locusts, properly cooked, were edible. They constituted one of the most delicate of foods. They were often served to invalids and to those whose weak stomachs were unable to assimilate any other kind of diet. Thus some commentators assert that the figure of the text is that of an old man contorted with pain because his digestive organs have given out. The dinner of locusts which he has eaten instead of being transformed into blood and bone and nerve and muscle is lying like a lump of lead within him. Others assert that the text is the figure of an aged man whose emaciated body, with its shriveled limbs and curved backbone, has taken upon itself the form of a lean grasshopper. Thus Tithonus in his old age was supposed to have been changed into this chirping insect because the Greek gods who had promised him immortality upon earth had refused to endow him with eternal youth.

But, though many interpretations are offered to explain the meaning of my text, there is one simple interpretation which, I believe, will appeal to the common sense of all. Solomon used the figure of the chirping grasshopper to illustrate the fact that if we do not have the grace of God in our hearts there will come a time when the little annoyances of life will tease and tantalize and trouble us, even as the buzzing of an insect can destroy the slumbers of a sleeping invalid or as the slamming of a door makes a nervously prostrated patient start up in fright and bedews his cold forehead with clammy sweat. The wisest of all men seems to say to you and me, "The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is just as essential for the little troubles as for the big, for the insectile trials as for the mountainous afflictions." The purpose of this sermon is to discuss some of the little annoyances of life and to state how, by the grace of God, we may combat them. I want to present this theme to those whose physical and mental frames have been prematurely weakened by the strenuous, hardworking lives they have been compelled to lead as well as to those whose once strong bodies are bowing upon nervous collapse on account of the natural approach of old age.

Petty Annoyances

The kitchen and bedroom and nursery and parlor of the average home reveal many of the so-called petty annoyances which can render morbid and unhappy the minds and the hearts of the inmates, especially to the wives and mothers. It is the annoyance of trying to build a fire early in the morning, when the damper will not open, that exemplifies how the grasshopper may become a burden. It is the trouble of getting the children off to school at the right time, when the tired mother finds that her boy has worn a hole in one of his stockings and there is not another clean pair to put on. It is the annoyance of hunting up a pair of scissors which your little girl lost when she took them to make doll's dresses. It is the annoyance of having the butcher and the groceryman fail to bring home the vegetables and the meats in time to be cooked for dinner. And then there is the annoyance to the wife of having her husband complain because his meals are not served on time. It is the nagging annoyance that comes every little while to all good housekeepers of having a lot of people drop in for dinner at the last moment when you are not expecting them and when you have nothing suitable in the larder to cook for them. It is the same kind of annoyance that Martha, in the little village of Bethany, experienced when her brother Lazarus brought Christ and some of the disciples to the home. Or it is the annoyance of having company call when the children have been playing hide and seek in the parlor and have turned the furniture upside down as though a cyclone had struck it, or the annoyance of being seen on the stairs by some particular friend when your hair is unkempt and your dress is disordered from working in the storeroom or from packing or from putting up lace curtains or from canning peaches or making currant jellies for the next winter's supply.

The housekeeper's little annoyances would not amount to much if there were only a few of them and if these annoyances came but seldom. But the trouble with the burden of the grasshoppers is that this insect always travels in multitudes. They advance by swarms, by hundreds, by thousands, by millions. They travel in such great numbers that they make the huge monsters in the African forests turn and flee in wild terror for their lives. They will destroy every harvest in their tracks and eat bare every tree branch. Their advent is a curse, and their departure nearly always leaves complete desolation. In the life of Sir Thomas Graham, the great financier who built the Royal Exchange of London, we read that he was left a foundling in a country field. His mother was a poor woman, who deserted him. Sir Thomas, as a baby, was discovered in that field and his life was saved through the chirping of a grasshopper, which attracted a boy to the place where the child was lying. But that is the only instance in all history which we remember where a life was saved by a grasshopper. As a rule, the locusts travel in such swarms that their mission seems to be to destroy life and not to save it.

Solomon's Advice.

It is the accumulation of little insect annoyances in the home that wrecks the nervous systems and mental happiness of our wives and mothers and sisters, not the individual annoyances which may only come once in a week, a month or in a year. Many a woman could bravely meet a great trouble in life. Many a woman could contemplate her execution as calmly and self possessed as did Nathan Hale, the Revolutionary martyr, who, under the scaffold, with the noose about his neck, said, "The only regret I have is that I have but one life to give to the service of my country." Yet the woman who could calmly meet a great trouble would have her patience and her nervous system sorely tried and her happiness wrecked by the sewing machine breaking, or by the dough refusing to bake in the oven and by the clothes tearing over the clothes.

Wives and mothers and sisters, what you need today is the advice Solomon gave to the young men of his time. You need the grace of God in your hearts to be able to overcome the burden of the grasshoppers. As Jesus Christ turned to the angry and quick tempered housekeeper when she rushed into his presence crying, "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone?" and gently said, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful," so Christ says to every living housekeeper today, "You need the grace in your heart to overcome the little annoyances as well as your great trials." O woman, how different life would be if you would ask Jesus to stand by your side at the kitchen stove! How different if you would only ask his help when you are mending baby's frock! How different if you would only ask Christ's help when you hunt for the missing silver spoon—if you would only ask him to help you to bear the burden of the grasshopper!

One day a minister was visiting an invalid who was noted for her great Christian piety and her exalted happiness, even though she had been bedridden for some years. He asked her, "Betty, how is it that you can lie here in bed and be so happy when once you were so full of physical life and energy?" "Well, pastor," answered the Christian woman, "it is only because I am leaning hard upon the omnipotent and sustaining arm of God. When I was strong and physically well, I used to have a lot to do. I had a large family, you know, sir, of little children. Then I used to hear God keep saying to me, 'Betty, you do this; Betty, you do that; Betty, you do the other thing.' And so, of course, I did what God wanted me to do. But now, sir, as I am lying in bed I hear God's voice just the same—the same sweet voice of the divine love. I hear it saying to me every day, 'Betty, you just lie here.' And so here I stay because it is God's will, and I am happy, very happy." Yes, the divine grace is sufficient to help every tired wife and mother triumphantly to bear the little annoyances as well as the great. It is sufficient to help a woman to bear the painful stitches in her side as well as to help her in her domestic duties. It is sufficient even to enable her to bear the nagging and tantalizing and continuous burden of a great swarm of buzzing locusts.

Divine Re-enforcement.

If it is important for wives and mothers to have the grace of God in order to overcome the infinitesimal burdens of the multitudinous locust, it is also important for husbands and fathers and brothers to have the same kind of divine re-enforcement to meet the burdensome insectile annoyances that afflict them in turn. It is not the droughts and the freshets and the mortgage upon the land that wear out the patience of the farmer. It is the annoyance of the neighbors borrowing his tools and not returning them. It is the annoyance of the farm hand getting drunk in the midst of the harvest. It is the stupidity of the same farm hand in giving the best horse cold water to drink when overheated, so that the animal becomes foundered.

I once heard of a prominent New York merchant who was sneered at by his business associates and called eccentric because every morning before a yard of cloth was taken down from any of the shelves or the front door of the store was opened to admit the customers he used to call into one room all of his employees. He summoned them together, the highest as well as the lowest, the heads of departments as well as the cashgirls and errand boys. Then in that room this great city merchant used to plead at the throne of mercy for spiritual help to meet the little trials and annoyances of the coming day. Surely if a family altar is needed in each home around which a father and a mother and the children every morning and evening may gather, such an altar ought to be erected in every factory and store and office and study. Such an altar ought to be raised by every father and husband and brother and son at which to plead daily for divine grace, so that they may overcome the little annoyances that course about every active life like the burden of the buzzing locusts.

Many unjust and contemptible criticisms which are daily made against us and our work can aptly be classed as among the insectile armies of the multitudinous locusts. A good, honest, vehement, healthy criticism ought to be spiritually helpful to the average man. It ought to act upon the ambitious mind and the spirit in the same way that a vigorous massage starts the sluggish blood coursing through the arteries and veins of our invalid body. It is when an army is invading a foreign land that the commanding general is most careful about his scouts and sentries and countersigns and powder and bullets and guns and commissary supplies. It is when a man feels that he is completely surrounded by rivals and by honest critics who do not believe in the way he is going that he puts forth his best energies and lives up to his highest standard.

Learn to Do Better.

The effect which the attack of an honest enemy ought to have upon our lives was once illustrated by a noted preacher. He pictured a flock of migrating birds being shot at by a fowler. At the first discharge of the hunter's gun the migrating birds merely give a few strokes of their powerful wings and fly higher. At the next discharge they fly still higher; at the next, higher and higher until they are out of range of their enemy's bullets. The true effect of an honest critic's attacks should be to make us fly higher and still higher into the spiritual life—to fly higher and higher until we come closer and closer to God. It was the attacks and sneers and derisive remarks hurled at the young statesman that nerved Benjamin Disraeli to become the great leader of the house of commons and the favorite prime minister of his queen. It was the harsh criticism of an English naval officer that made Admiral Farragut firmly set his teeth and lips together and redouble his energy when he drove his wooden ship past the supposed impassable batteries of New Orleans, and it is the deserved criticisms of our enemies that ought to make us more consecrated to our life's work and more willing to make sacrifices to accomplish our object.

But there is a Christian as well as an un-Christian way of meeting the criticisms of rivals and of those who are jealous of our successes. One way is to do as Plato, the great disciple of Socrates, did when he was told that even the boys in the streets were laughing at his singing. He answered, "Then I must learn to sing better, so that they will not laugh." The other way is to do as Alexander Pope, the vain and supersensitive poet of England, used to do. Instead of going ahead and doing the work that God gave him to do, and on account of his enemies' criticisms doing it better and better all the time, he wasted most of his life in bickerings and backbiting and in trying to destroy the reputations of those who were attacking him. The one way is to do as L. L. Moody did.

A man in Bluefield, W. Va., recently st twenty dollars, half of his month's ages, in the saloons drinking and aying the slot machines. This made impossible for him to pay his onth's rent. The next pay day he st in the same way forty dollars, the hole of his month's wages. This was hile Field Secretary West was hold- ing meetings in Bluefield. The wife of ie man was naturally in very great istress. She attended the meetings, gned an enrollment card, and came o Mr. West in tears, saying, "Give me ome cards. I want to help you run ie saloons out of Bluefield." She be- ame an active and effective worker, or her heart was in it. The husband, eized with remorse, signed an enroll- ment card before the meetings closed. here could be no stronger argument or the closing of the saloons, or for ie need of temperance organization.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above base- ment, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regu- lar rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same. When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WILLIAM E. ROSS.

A letter from Mr. D. M. Cloninger, Stanley, N. C., dated July 5, 1900, asking for catalogue of our school, contains this statement:

"I am personally acquainted with some of your former students, all of whom are now holding lucrative positions, and they attribute their success to the thorough training obtained at your college, and speak in most glowing terms of you and your college."

THANKFULNESS.

During the holiday season, as we stand on the delectable mountains between the two beautiful valleys—Thanksgiving and Christmas—let us listen to a little sermon. Here is the text:

"The best thing a heart that is thankful can do
Is this: to make thankful some other heart, too."

Our preacher is near by, and I can hear him now. It is a little bubbling brook, coming out of the heart of the mountain. It doesn't seem to be making much noise—it just comes along like a little silver stream of joy, as if it were the overflow of a big exhaustless reservoir inside. But it is so clear and so cool, and its path down the mountainside looks as if some good fairy had laid a ribbon of crystal on the green skirt of this mound of beauty. But listen! There is music in the little ripples as they go dancing along, for they are singing:

"The best thing a heart that is thankful can do
Is this: to make thankful some other heart, too."

So it goes laughing and singing along down into the valley, where a little bird, with its breast painted red, is fluttering over the refreshing water anon dipping one wing and then the other; then, giving it a parting kiss, he darts away, and under the window of one of the world's lonely ones in a neighboring village there is soon heard the sweet trill of a little winged angel singing cheerily:

The best thing a heart that is thankful can do this: to make thankful some other heart, too."

The light has come into the little cottage—a few beams of sunshine from the little red breast of the songster that sipped the nectar flowing from the heart of the mountain down into the valley.

AN OUTLET.

All that some people like to make seem useful is an outlet. They are so full of sympathy, benevolence, charity and all the Christian graces that it seems almost a wonder that their pent-up goodness doesn't burst its bounds and scatter to all quarters. "If I only knew of some poor child who needed something," or, "If I could find a hungry family to whom I could send our surplus food"—we have all heard similar expressions.

Brother, sister, you need look no further than our Methodist Orphanage for an outlet of your love. The most useful things in this world would be useless without an outlet. God never intended that our talents should be trapped in napkins. He keeps the sun shining, the streams flowing, the wind blowing, the grass growing, and the world is kept healthy and habitable by motion. So let us keep and develop our graces by using them—by finding for them some useful outlet.

It seems as if God has set aside one-half of the world to care for the other half. And He has given to His people the means and the opportunity for exercising the Christian graces.

Our Methodist institutions have a peculiar claim upon Methodist people. In caring for them we are caring for our own. The orphans under our care are children of deceased members of the "household of faith." Who can tell to what depths of misery and sin these children might have fallen had not the arms of the Church been thrown around them in loving embrace?

Here, then, is an outlet for your Christmas sympathy and help. An outlet, too, that may prove to be an inlet for heavenly blessings to reach your souls.

In connection with this little exhortation, we append a little poem which all our readers, old and young, may read with profit:

THE BEST THAT I CAN.

"I cannot do much," said the little star,
"To make the dark world bright!
My silvery beam cannot struggle far Thro' the folding gloom of night!
But I am a part of God's great plan,
And I cheerfully do the best that I can."

"What is the use," said the fleecy cloud,
Of these few drops that I hold?
They will hardly bend the lily proud,
Tho' caught in her cup of gold,
Yet, I am part of God's great plan,
So my treasures I'll give as well as I can."

A child went merrily forth to play,
But a thought like a silver thread,
Kept winding in and out all day
Thro' the happy golden head.
Mother said, "Darling, do all you can
For you are a part of God's great plan."

She knew no more than the glancing star,
Nor the cloud with its chalice full
How, why, and for what, all strange things were;
She was only a child at school;
But she thought, "It is part of God's great plan
That even I should do all that I can."

So she helped a younger child along
When the road was rough to the feet;
And she sang from her heart a little song
That we all thought passing sweet;
And her father, a weary, toil-worn man,
Said, "I will do likewise the best that I can."

Our best, ah, children, the best of us
Must hide our faces away
When the God of the vineyard comes to look
At our task at the close of day!
But for strength from above 'tis the Master's plan)
We'll pray, and we'll do the best that we can.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

work now being done under the auspices of the Home Mission societies by the Methodist congregations of our city, the said committee to report to this body next Monday.

The president appointed as that committee Rev. W. R. Proctor, Rev. Dr. R. D. Smart and Rev. E. T. Dadmun.

UNION WATCH NIGHT SERVICE.

Rev. Dr. Smart announced that the official body of Epworth church had unanimously agreed to dispense with their usual custom of holding an individual service at their church on Christmas day this year, and that the Epworth congregation would unite in the union service on that morning at Cumberland Street church.

Dr. Smart further stated that the board of stewards had decided to throw open Epworth church on the last night of the old year for a union watch night service, and that he had been instructed to turn the church that night over to the Methodist preachers' meeting for the meeting to be controlled and conducted by them, that body to appoint the preacher to deliver the sermon.

On motion of Rev. E. T. Dadmun, the invitation of Epworth church was accepted, and Rev. J. W. Stiff was appointed to preach the sermon. Alternate, Rev. C. L. Bane.

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

Under the call of the churches reports were heard.

Rev. J. K. Joliff had fair congregations at Queen Street church Sunday. He received four new members by certificate.

Rev. C. L. Bane reported excellent congregations at Cumberland Street church. He preached at the 11 o'clock service, and Rev. Dr. Paul Whitehead preached at the evening service. Mr. Bane made an address before the Sunday School Missionary Society of Wright Memorial church in the afternoon.

At Trinity church Rev. George Wesley Jones had good congregations and received five new members by certificate.

Rev. J. W. Stiff reported a fine Sunday school at LeKies Memorial, and large congregations.

Rev. W. T. Green had a fairly good day at Central church. Rev. J. E. Martin, of the Methodist Orphanage, preached at night.

Rev. J. H. Kabler reported a fine Sunday school at Gilmerton church. He had a large congregation in the morning. There was no service at night.

Rev. J. B. Winn reported the largest Sunday school at Ghent church since its organization. There were ninety-one scholars present. The tabernacle was crowded morning and night to hear him. Eight new members were received by certificate.

Rev. E. K. Odell conducted the usual services at Huntersville church and received two members on profession of faith.

Dr. Whitehead preached at Epworth church Sunday morning and at Cumberland Street at night.

Rev. Dr. Garland preached at Wright Memorial Sunday morning, and at Owens Memorial at night.

Dr. Smart reported a good Sunday school at Epworth and fine congregations morning and night. Dr. Whitehead preached at 11 A. M., and he at night. Dr. Smart also attended the meeting of the Y. M. C. A. at the Academy Sunday afternoon.

Rev. W. R. Proctor had fair congregations at McKendree. He received one member on profession of faith.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun received three new members in the Sunday school at Centenary church, and was greeted with good congregations morning and night.

At Owens Memorial Rev. L. W. Guyer had good congregations. He received six members by certificate and one on profession of faith. Dr. Garland preached for him at night.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had fair congregations to hear him at Lambert's Point. There were several additions to the Sunday school. He held a Junior Epworth League meeting in the afternoon and attended the Senior League meeting at night.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt held his services Sunday in the infant class room of the Park Place new Methodist church.

Rev. George H. McFaden had the presiding elder, Dr. Garland, with him at Wright Memorial church Sunday morning, who preached a strong and forceful sermon. The pastor preached at night and received one by certificate. Rev. C. L. Bane made a fine address at the Sunday School Missionary Society meeting.

Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins preached morning and night to full houses at Port Norfolk.

It made it the rule of his life to never individually attack a person who had attacked him. The more Mr. Moody was personally assailed and misrepresented the more he would go to God in prayer and ask the Divine Father to make his life so pure and true that there might not remain in his heart any cause for the charge which his enemies were making. The other way is to do as many of us are doing. When a neighbor or a critic makes any derogatory statement about us and our work, we prove that we are not falsely condemned in all particulars, that at least we have the fault of retaliation, because we go hunting for the faults in our neighbor's lives instead of trying, with divine help, to correct the evils in our own.

Rise by the Grace of God.

Thus, my brother, I want you, by the grace of God, to rise higher and higher in the spiritual life until at last you are at an altitude above and out of earshot of the buzzing sound of the locusts of fault finding enemies. I want you to rise so high in the spiritual life that you will not care what people may say or think about you or yours as long as you can bring these people to love and live for Christ. Humanly speaking, it is awfully hard to bear the petty annoyances of your neighbors, criticising you and saying mean things about your wife and children. It is hard, from a human standpoint, to refrain from flinging a stone at the locusts of evil nagging which are buzzing about you and your loved ones. But by the grace of God you can live down these petty annoyances. You can go on doing your work, even as Christ went on doing his work, in spite of the jeers and the scoffs which the Pharisees uttered against him and his disciples.

If you are absorbed in your Divine Master's work, you will receive sufficient grace to make you indifferent to the little annoyances caused by what people may say against you. You will be like that gateman whom Major Cole some years ago saw in a Chicago depot. It was during a bitterly cold night. Many male passengers were grumbling and complaining because this gateman made every one of these men unbutton his coat and show his ticket before he could go to his train. "My friend," said Major Cole, "you do not seem very popular with the passengers of this road." "No," answered the gateman with a smile, "but that does not concern me. So long as I obey orders I am all right. There is only one man whose good opinion affects me, and that is the president of the road. So long as he is satisfied, I do not care what these people say." In order to overcome the locust burden of what fault finders may say against you, remember, my Christian brothers, our duty is not to please man, but God, and God alone. After you are convinced that in what you do you are pleasing God it makes but little difference what any enemy—man, woman or child—may say against you or your loved ones.

Walking With Christ.

The increasing signs of physical and mental decadence can also be classed among the burdens of the buzzing locust. The annoyance of feeling that your eyes are becoming nearsighted and that you have to wear glasses and sit very close to the light when you read the Bible or the evening newspaper. The annoyance of having the eardrum refuse to clearly throw the echoing sound into the brain, as it once did. The annoyance of not being able to run for a street car or to step off that car when it is in motion. The annoyance of having some young fellow in the car arise and offer you a seat as though you were an old man. Or, what is worse than all, the annoyance of feeling that you cannot do as much work and do it as quickly as you once did a few years ago. As your brain power seems to lose its grip you peevishly place your hand upon your forehead and say: "I do not know what is the matter with my brain. My memory seems to have completely left me. I cannot recall the simplest names or facts. I have to make a memorandum of everything. Even my children have to look after me now as though I was a little child."

When the faculties begin to fail and the hair to whiten, the burden of the locusts becomes very heavy to bear unless a man as a Christian is walking side by side with Christ. Even the Christian will find this burden a heavy burden unless he has an extra amount of divine grace given to him. Mr. Beecher once said that one of the saddest days he ever spent was when the realization first came upon him that he was going down the hillside of life and very soon would not be as physically strong or as mentally alert as formerly. The Plymouth pastor said that this saddening realization came upon him one day when he was attempting to dodge in and out of the carriages and stages and dray wagons that were moving up and down Broadway. As he was in the middle of that thoroughfare he heard a driver angrily call out two or three times: "Get out of the way, old man! Haven't you any sense? Are you too old to think? Get out of the way, there, gray hairs, or you'll be run down!" Mr. Beecher hurriedly looked around to find out what old man was in danger. To his surprise and chagrin, he found that the drayman was shouting to him and that he and no other was the "old man." It is not a hard struggle to physically die. Dying is just as natural an act for the body as is the act of being born. But it is hard to grow old, to feel that you have to ride when once it was an exhilaration to walk, to know that the mind is failing, that the heart has not the old vigor, that the hand which once grasped and wielded the hilt of a sword must now do the small chores around the old homestead. It is hard to know that upon the trembling shoulders of old age even the weight of a small grasshopper's body can become a burden, a heavy, crushing burden.

The Great Burden Bearer.

Yet, my friends, amid the decaying faculties of old age the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ is sufficient to overcome the burden of the buzzing locusts. What was the testimony of the aged Thomas Guthrie, the great Christian warrior of old Scotland? Standing before a large assemblage of little children, he said: "Don't call me an old man, as some people do. Why, I am as young and happy as any child sitting before me today. My limbs may not be as strong as they once were. One of my feet may be in the grave, but the other foot is planted upon the earth so firmly that its leg has sunken knee deep in the clover tops. My hearing may not be as accurate as it once was, but my ears are continually hearing the sounds of sweetest music. My eye may not be as keen to read a book, but my eyesight is continually becoming more inspired to see the beauties of earth as well as the beauties of heaven. I am not an old man. As I approach my second childhood I have begun to live a life of eternal happiness and of never ending joys."

Golden Light Lodge was awarded the banner at the session of District Lodge for largest number of members added.

That is to say, we will give the magazine for twelve months with every yearly subscription to this paper, new or renewal, for only 25 cents extra. Send $1.25, and we will send you for one year the Southern Methodist Recorder and the splendid pictorial monthly

MAGAZINE.

This is the only illustrated Methodist magazine published in the United States. Most of our readers have seen it; if not, write us, and a free sample copy will be sent you. The Magazine is a beautiful publication, containing not only the general literature and artistic illustrations which are characteristic of the best features of the high-class secular magazines, but it has also the distinctive literature of our Church. No other magazine so richly deserves a place in every Methodist home. It is chaste in matter, lavish in illustration, ably edited, and contains departments of interest to every member of the family, old and young.

HOW THE METHODIST MAGAZINE IS REGARDED BY THE PRESS AND BY CHURCH OFFICIALS.

"We welcome it, relish it, recommend it."

—Western Christian Advocate.

"Its aim is to advocate and magnify the things which worldwide Methodism holds in common."

—Central Christian Advocate.

"A high-grade periodical, worthy of a place in every Methodist home."

—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"Instructive, entertaining, edifying."

—Pennsylvania Methodist.

"A vigorous religious monthly, one that should be a benediction to many homes, and an inspiration to many lives."

—Methodist Magazine and Review.

"Ought to run easily to an issue of a hundred thousand."

—Richmond Christian Advocate.

"It ought to take the place in our Methodist homes of magazines of less religious character."

—Arkansas Methodist.

"A triumph of literary talent and mechanical art."

—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"Worthy the great Church of which it is a literary exponent."

—St. Louis Globe-Dem.

"Takes high rank with the best periodical literature of the day."

—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"Welcomed by the whole Methodist family."

—Bishop C. C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."

—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"I hope every Christian will have this beautiful magazine."

—Bishop J. F. Hurst.

"It ranks with the best."

—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart."

—Bishop W. A. Candler.

"A gem among the monthlies of our land."

—Prof. T. Barry Smith, Central College, Fayette, Mo.

This remarkable offer of a year's subscription to this splendid Magazine, for only 25 cents, is for prompt acceptance. It may not remain open long, and we hope that all our readers will take advantage of it at once.

Send price of renewal for one year, and date of your subscription to our paper will be extended, and the American Illustrated Methodist Magazine will be sent you for twelve months.

Let us hear from you at once. Don't wait. This is a great opportunity to get this beautiful pictorial monthly magazine for a whole year at a cost to you of only 25 cents. Send $1.25 for the two periodicals to the

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Randolph-Macon Woman's College and Blackstone Institute both have departments of Pedagogy, and train teachers by means of observation and practice in "Model Schools."
